Social workers, particularly those in the areas of Administration and Development and International Social Work, may have an interest in international work. In such situations, the MSCID could equip them with a complementary skill set. Likewise, development and relief workers often find themselves in situations where social work skills in counseling and therapy would be useful. This MSCID/MSW dual degree helps prepare students for various forms of work in which clinical and administrative skills in development and social work are needed. It enables students to integrate development and social work knowledge, values, and skills into a multifaceted approach to service, thereby enhancing their value in the world and allowing for a greater breadth of employment opportunities for students.
