Register for Renaissance Kids: An Architecture Day Camp

Registration is underway for Renaissance Kids, an architecture day camp for kids ages 4-16, held at the Andrews University School of Architecture. There are six week-long sessions offered during the months of June and July.

Kids get to experience hands-on fun with design, drafting, building, sketching, watercolors and more. Each year, students attending the final session (Session 6) have an opportunity to participate in a real-world building project. This year’s project is designing and building a paved sitting area in front of the Curious Kids Museum in St. Joseph, Mich. In preparation for the July relocation of Griggs University & International Academy to the campus of Andrews University, Andrews has purchased the Lake Union Conference building, located adjacent to the University’s main entrance on Old U.S. 31. Ownership of Griggs University & International Academy was transferred to Andrews University in November, 2010. The physical move of Griggs to Andrews will take place next month, July 2011.

According to Elder Don Livesay, president of the Lake Union Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, the Lake Union Conference building is far larger than is needed to carry out the current functions of their organization. “The Lake Union Conference is looking to establish a new headquarters more suitable and efficient to the size of our staff, but still in the Berrien Springs area,” says Livesay.

When it was first announced that Griggs was moving to the campus of Andrews University, the Lake Union Conference offered to help with office space needs by leasing half of its building to the University, but eventually offered to sell the entire building. The purchase will be implemented over a period of a year and a half. During this time, Andrews University and Griggs University will share the building with the Lake Union Conference. In time, the Lake Union Conference will move into a new building and Andrews/Griggs will then occupy the entire Lake Union Conference building.

During the month of June, several University offices will relocate to the Lake Union building including the Office of Development, the Center for Distance Learning and Instructional Technology and Affiliations & Extension Programs. In July, new and existing employees of Griggs University will also move into the building.

When fully implemented, this new facility will house the functions at Andrews University that are particularly directed toward the University's external relations. Plans are also in place to more physically and aesthetically integrate the Lake Union building into the rest of the campus.

“Although we will miss our good neighbors in the Lake Union Conference on our front lawn, as it were, I am pleased that in the long run the entire front of the campus will be University land and University facilities,” says Andreassen.

The Andrews University Board of Trustees convened for their summer meetings June 5-6, using, for the first time, the boardroom of the Lake Union Conference building. Andrews is purchasing the building and according to President Niels-Erik Andreasen, it will be the new headquarters for the Board of Trustees meetings.

The first Board action taken was the reelection of officers of the University and the Board of Trustees. Bylaws require the elections take place within 90 days following the meeting of the constituency; the constituency met in March 2011.

The Board also voted a capital request of $150,000 for windows in Lamson Hall, which is included in the University’s capital budget plan.

Larry Schalk, vice president for Financial Administration, reported on operations. The Griggs University transfer is coming along nicely. There has been $1.25 million allocated to cover the cost of the transition. To date, approximately $500,000 of those funds has either been spent or allocated.

Andreasen said, “So far, it looks to be going well and we aren’t draining University resources to bring Griggs here.”

The budget for the past fiscal year, which ended April 30, was scheduled to end with an increase in net assets of $3.1 million; the preliminary draft is $1.2 million, a shortfall of approximately $1.9 million. “There is still a gain, but a smaller gain than what was budgeted,” said Andreasen. Undergraduate tuition was stable while graduate tuition fell behind. Other expenses ran ahead in certain areas including Student Life, plant operations, Human Resources—legal support for incoming international faculty, interest and depreciation.

The line of credit the University uses is $2.5 million less than last year in part because revenue generating sales and services were up. A large portion of the increased revenue is attributed to the Andrews University Press sales of the Andrews Study Bible, which has exceeded $1 million. Less than a year following its release, a second printing of 25,000 copies of the Bible has been procured. A third printing of an inexpensive edition to be used as giveaways by evangelists is also underway. Andreasen said contracts have been signed to translate the Andrews Study Bible into Spanish and Portuguese; another contract has been signed to turn the Andrews Study Bible into a digital medium for use on smartphones and iPads. Andreasen concluded by saying, “The Andrews Study Bible has done very well and is blessing many people.”

Andreasen shared a report on construction and fund-raising with the Board. The fund-raising initiative for the Undergraduate Learning Center has raised $8.2 million; there is still about $400,000 needed to reach the goal. Donations for Buer Hall, part of the Undergraduate Learning Center, received during this past fiscal year total $570,000. Those monies will be used to buy back bonds that were issued to borrow money to pay for Buer’s construction. University administration expects to have Nethery Hall, the second half of construction for the Undergraduate Learning Center, ready in time for classes resuming in August 2011.

Andreasen shared a report on enrollment projections from Stephen Payne, vice-president for Enrollment Management. Some highlights include freshmen admissions are up 7% and overall, applications are up 34%. Andreasen noted that these numbers could be deceiving because electronic applications make it easier to apply to multiple institutions. Transfers are down slightly and first-time graduate applications are up 29%. Overall, the net for next fall is a 6% enrollment increase.

There was a report from the President’s Council. They voted on two items to bring to the Board of Trustees. The first was a recommendation to not ignore the branding value of the Griggs name. Andreasen shared that heavy consideration is being given to renaming the Lake Union Conference building “Griggs Hall.”

The second recommendation was in regards to the engineering program. The President’s Council felt engineering should hold a strong place in the University’s strategic plan and that consideration should be given to establishing a School of Engineering.

Andreasen shared encouraging news from North Central Association. They have given a recommendation to the Higher Learning Commission Board to authorize Andrews to assume ownership of Griggs at the HLC’s June meeting.

The Board also discussed the five health professions in the College of Arts & Sciences: medical laboratory sciences, nursing, nutrition & wellness, physical therapy and speech-language pathology & audiology. Each department is doing well, reported Andreasen, but the challenge is each one is working very independently. The Board discussed the possibility of forming a School of Health Professions, which would initially house these five departments. Additional consultation and consideration will take place, and the Board will revisit the issue at a future meeting.

The Board also approved a number of faculty and staff appointments:

Strengthening our region's economy: An interview with Michigan State Representative Sharon Tyler

By BILL WILSON

The Blue Waters Group

3:17 PM EDT, April 26, 2011

Sharon Tyler, a Republican, was elected to her first term in the Michigan House of Representatives in 2008. She serves House District 78, which includes Niles and portions of Berrien and Cass counties. She has 30 years experience in economic development. During the last 11 years, before entering the legislature, she attracted more than $177 million in new business and 2,200 jobs to southwestern Michigan. She was executive director of the Southwest Michigan Economic Growth Alliance and the Berrien County Manufacturers Council, and has served in numerous other civic capacities. A lifelong resident of Berrien County, she has two adult children.

Representative Tyler recently spoke to THRIVE MICHIANA about opportunities and challenges relating to economic development in southwestern Michigan, and in the state as a whole.

Thrive Michiana (TM): Manufacturing jobs in Michigan have been hard hit by the recession and by changes in the automotive industry. How will those jobs be replaced?

Rep. Tyler (RT): Manufacturing is still number one in Michigan but that is slowly changing to agriculture, which is a $71 billion industry. Third is tourism.

Agriculture really has grown, and not just from farming. Agriculture includes changing corn into plastics and crops into energy. One thing that's different between manufacturing and agriculture and why we need to build the second largest industry is that our manufacturers can always leave. They can come and go. But basically the farm industry, when things get tough, they're here to stay.

One main thrust in Lansing is that we have been doing a lot with battery cell manufacturing. We have created unbelievable incentives to entice those businesses here. Unfortunately, when you create a business, those jobs usually are not immediate. They may take two, three or even four years before they're really in full operation.

Our tourism industry continues to thrive, and I think with the economy we're seeing people not traveling as far. It's been wonderful for Michigan.

I am a former economic development director. I did economic development for 30 years, and in 2004 the Michigan Economic Development Corp. made me Economic Development Director of the Year because I brought several companies into the state. I always felt that we needed to be more diverse. As we're going into an election year and we have the opportunity for a new governor, I think we're going to see new ideas that are more diverse. I've been working with Gov. [Jennifer] Granholm on the Council for Labor and Economic Growth. I was appointed to the entrepreneurship committee. Michigan was built on entrepreneurs, and I feel that when times get hard you see more incubators sprouting and more new ideas. I think Michigan will rebuild from that.

TM: Are you concerned that wages in agriculture generally are below those in manufacturing?

RT: That's why I say we have to be diverse. The thing with tech jobs is that not everybody has the ability to be in those jobs. There is skilled labor and there are a lot of people who are just unskilled labor. It shouldn't just all be placed on one type of job because everybody learns differently. Everybody has a different education level. What do you do with people who do not have those skills, who have not been trained, who wouldn't even have the ability to learn them? So you still need those kinds of jobs.

Agriculture jobs may be in bioscience. They may be in energy, in the research and development of what we may create. You've got to go the next step and open up your mind.

TM: What value do you see in a regional alliance that involves economic development organizations in northern Indiana and southwestern Michigan, especially in bringing new industries and jobs to Michiana?

RT: I'm totally for regional - intrastate and bi-state - alliances. Representing a border district, I understand the importance of regional partnerships. We can learn a lot from others. We may have certain resources that areas adjoining us do not have, so you've got to piggyback on one area to make the other rich.

I find that there's always a time within your own state, with your own local development efforts and even when you're working as a bi-state region, you're always going to have different areas competing with each other.

But after you close on the deal you can help the other one out because you know there will be other jobs created, or housing built. If we can work together to make a strong region, that is a very positive trait to attract business to Michigan. Unfortunately, the legislatures do not always see that and that's why it's very important that legislators who are elected on the border educate the other legislators of the value and importance of regional cooperation to their state.

TM: You were involved in initial discussions about forming a Michiana partnership. And work is moving ahead to incorporate this regional group to include area counties in Michigan and Indiana.

RT: It's needed. It's very, very important to have the tools to market the region. I believe in that kind of promotion. We are kidding ourselves if we don't promote the border area. If companies are looking at one side of the border, you know they are looking at the other. You might as well build those relationships and tap everybody's assets because there might be something a company wants that's over the border.

TM: From your perspective as a former director of economic development in the region, what do you see as the region's strengths?

RT: I think that we are really lucky in the region. We have the University of Notre Dame, we have Andrews University, and we have the other colleges, Western Michigan, and the community colleges. The education and training field is one where we're very rich and we need to use that. Right now, with manufacturing there will always be ongoing training. You get a new piece of equipment and somebody has to be trained. You get research and development, and that's a major blessing.

The transportation hubs in our area are important, too. If you're going to ship, we have unbelievable opportunities with UPS, freight and air. The resources are unbelievable.

In certain places, not all, we have broadband. I have to say more in Indiana than in Michigan. I wish others realized the importance, but that broadband infrastructure, if it should be expanded, gives us great opportunity. Legislators have to focus on broadband infrastructure.

TM: What are the weaknesses?

RT: Sometimes, what you are up against, it's a national issue. We don't have jobs; we have too much tax structure, too much regulation, so right now I'm blaming a lack of growth on the federal government.

As far as local issues are concerned, sometimes the climate is a drawback - just look at the mounds of snow we have in the wintertime.
More seriously, it's permitting requirements and the amount of time it takes to get approval. That's something in the state of Michigan I am working on. You should not have to wait long to get a permit. It should be on a timely basis. But the key is to have local government support, and if you don't have local government by your side when you are developing a site, then you have no project. A company depends on the local government for it to succeed.

TM: Economic development traditionally is made easier if there is a dominant industry or metropolitan area to serve as an attractor. Michiana has a shared workforce, but its economy ranges from manufacturing to tourism to agriculture. Is the workforce enough to tie together regional economic development efforts, or do you see other opportunities?

RT: We can't point to one thing and say, 'This is us, and this is why you should be here because this is what we do.' I see more opportunities. I think there are a lot of keys. The biggest key to what we have is the transportation hub. Here, people move in traffic. In Chicago they sit in traffic.

We have the infrastructure in place to attract business. Years ago, you could bring a company in, and you didn't need water and sewer. Today, you need that infrastructure to make it happen, even to get a company to look at you. And we have that.

TM: If you had to suggest a brand identity for Michiana, what would it be?

RT: What does Michiana mean? Michigan and Indiana partnering together. A partnership. A relationship. When a company comes, it wants to know how do you work together. How does the region communicate? Businesses see the community as a whole, and if you can show that the relationship is a working support system where businesses will grow, they want to be a part of that, too. It ranges from education to infrastructure to local units of government working together. It comes from utilities and public services, like fire and police. If there's an ongoing relationship that can pull together when needed, that's where a company is going to want to build.

TM: The University of Notre Dame is growing as an economic development asset. The university has committed about $80 million over the past two years to promote research that has the promise of creating new businesses, and this year surpassed for the first time $100 million in outside research grant funding. How much of a factor can the university be in driving a local economic rebirth, and what does the region need to do in order to be competitive so that these new ventures launch and grow here rather than elsewhere?

RT: Notre Dame's research investment is a great benefit for the state of Indiana although typically university-based programs only benefit the state they're located in. Regionally, it will be a great resource for retaining and attracting businesses, and it is my hope that Michigan and Indiana can work together to promote the region as a whole. Unfortunately, as it is now, funds are limited so that companies using Michigan incentive tools must go through Michigan universities. I would like to see that change so that we can keep and grow jobs in the Michiana area.

TM: The establishment of the Midwest Institute for Nanoelectronics Discovery at Notre Dame in 2008 raised public interest, hope and expectations that the local economy was transitioning into one powered by technology and research-based businesses. Do you predict any benefit to Michigan from these types of activities?

RT: Some of Michigan's local community colleges are also involved in nanotechnology programs. Our local manufacturers are using nanotechnology and are working with local community colleges in southwest Michigan to achieve those goals. It is certainly a part of the solution towards retaining and attracting companies.

TM: What types of incentives and programs does Michigan have to support research and development and new types of businesses? From your perspective as a legislator, are these programs effective or adequate? What would you change and what new approaches would you offer?

RT: Number one, we need to review our current tax structure. The Michigan Business Surcharge was one of the main reasons I ran for state representative and I sponsored and cosponsored a lot of legislation to remove the Michigan Business Surcharge. It was okay when Indiana had an inventory tax, but when Indiana removed the inventory tax, it hurt Michigan. One of the issues Michigan faces and we need to review is the Michigan property tax. I think if we continue to review and reform our tax structure, we will be on the cutting edge.

Michigan utilizes the Michigan Economic Growth Authority and Michigan Economic Development Corp. to attract and retain businesses. These programs help assess the company's needs and then provide incentive packages based on those needs. Before incentives are offered we also assess the revenue and job creation the company expects in order to determine the value of the incentive to the state. Michigan is currently working to reform the Michigan Business Tax to create a more competitive business environment.

TM: Is the workforce prepared for new types of jobs? What needs to be done to prepare them?

RT: The universities and community colleges need to be talking to businesses. The schools cannot decide what is needed. They have to get that insight from the businesses and see what the real needs are. This is the number one priority because businesses can see the contracts they're bidding on and the way things are moving in the future. Otherwise we're training for the businesses that are already existing instead of moving toward the future. Sometimes, schools fail to listen and they decide, "This is what you need," instead of making sure businesses can benefit from their programs.

But we do have the ability. We do have that strength. Job training has to be part of your incentive package. If you don't have that piece you won't attract businesses. As you know, models of cars change basically every five years so you always have to think what is next. You always have to plan out the next five years, if not 10 or 15. Doing economic development since 1979, we always knew this could change or disappear. We saw those studies sitting on the shelf but we ignored them, and shame on us for ignoring them. Whether it's energy or batteries, there's always going to be a need for a trained workforce able to learn new things. If you're not trained, the next competitor is going to move in and have that edge and take your business away.

TM: Economic recovery and transition are long and difficult processes. Do you have a model of another community or region that has successfully remade itself?

RT: In these hard times? Probably four years ago I would have thought of some. At this time, with the issues that we face, I cannot say because things have changed so drastically. It's too soon to tell because I think we have a lot more yet to come. It could be good or it could be bad. We will have to adjust.

I have seen a lot of downtowns that are revitalized and I think that's a positive. It attracts business and industrial growth to the area because part of attracting a business is being in a place where people want to raise their families. I've seen that in a lot of communities. That's wonderful but that's not the entire key. Companies want a lot of different components, not just one.

TM: Why should we be optimistic for the future of the Michiana economy?

RT: Why shouldn't we be optimistic?

Andrews buys Lake Union Conference building

John Madill / H-P staff Andrews University in Berrien Springs has purchased the Lake Union Headquarters building just north of the university's main entrance.

Center overlooking Old 31 to be integrated into campus

Published: Thursday, June 9, 2011 1:07 PM EDT

BERRIEN SPRINGS - Andrews University has purchased the Lake Union Conference building, next to the university's main entrance on Old U.S. 31, Andrews announced.

Andrews bought the building in preparation for the July relocation of Griggs University & International Academy to the Andrews campus.

Griggs ownership was transferred to Andrews in November.

Griggs is an accredited distance education and home school provider.

Elder Don Livesay, president of the Lake Union Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, said the Lake Union Conference building is far larger than is needed.

"The Lake Union Conference is looking to establish a new headquarters more suitable and efficient to the size of our staff, but still in the Berrien Springs area," Livesay said in an Andrews news release.
After the Griggs transfer announcement, the Lake Union Conference offered to help by leasing half of its building to the university, the university reported. Eventually the conference offered to sell the entire building.

The purchase will be implemented over a year and a half. During this time, Andrews and Griggs will share the building with the Lake Union Conference.

In time, the Lake Union Conference will move into a new building and Andrews/Griggs will then occupy the entire Lake Union Conference building.

Several university offices will relocate this month to the Lake Union building, including the Office of Development, the Center for Distance Learning and Instructional Technology and Affiliations & Extension Programs. In July, new and existing Griggs employees will move into the building.

Eventually, the new facility will house the Andrews University’s external relations. Plans are in place to integrate the Lake Union building into the rest of the campus.

"Although we will miss our good neighbors in the Lake Union Conference on our front lawn, as it were, I am pleased that in the long run the entire front of the campus will be university land and university facilities," Andrews President Niels-Erik Andreasen said in the news release.
