Register for Renaissance Kids: An Architecture Day Camp

Registration is underway for Renaissance Kids, an architecture day camp for kids ages 4–16, held at the Andrews University School of Architecture. There are six week-long sessions offered during the months of June and July.

Kids get to experience hands-on fun with design, drafting, building, sketching, watercolors and more. While exploring the discipline and lessons of architecture, Renaissance Kids provides a fun array of hands-on projects through which children learn about history and culture, design concepts, the architect’s tools, construction and materials, community and citizenship.

Each year, students attending the final session (Session 6) have an opportunity to participate in a real-world building project. This year’s project is designing and building a paved sitting area in front of the Curious Kids Museum in St. Joseph, Mich. In 2009, students worked on an arbor outside of the Andrews University School of Architecture; in 2010, they created decorative pieces for and installed a Whisper Dish at the Curious Kids Discovery Zone in St. Joseph, Mich.

Griggs Moving from Maryland to Michigan

Griggs University & International Academy, which has operated in Maryland for more than a century, is about to have a major “excuse our dust” transition moment over the next month.

During the weeks of June 20–July 18, Griggs University & International Academy will be physically moving its operations from Silver Spring, Md., to its new home on the campus of Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Mich. In November 2010 Andrews assumed ownership of this more-than-a-century-old international distance education institution. When operations officially transfer to Berrien Springs in July 2011, several new employees for Griggs University & International Academy will join the Andrews University community as part of a newly established School of Distance Education. Read full story.

The School of Distance Education will operate out of the Lake Union Conference Building, which Andrews recently purchased. On June 1, 2011 Andrews University took ownership of the Lake Union Conference building, but will share it with the Union until they build a new facility for their operations. The wing occupied by Griggs University & International Academy will be named Griggs Hall, in honor of Frederick Griggs, a leading Adventist educator at Andrews and elsewhere. When the Lake Union Conference relocates, Andrews will begin utilizing the entire building and the building in its entirety will be renamed Griggs Hall. In addition to housing Griggs, the new Griggs Hall will also house the School of Distance Education and other University services. (Photo by IMC photographer Darren Heslop)

The obsolete, 55-year-old Berrien County Animal Shelter in Berrien Center will be replaced this year. The new animal control center will be on 48.3 acres of farmland along Napier Avenue in Benton Township. The property could, over time, become a "campus" for other county buildings.

After the animal control center, Berrien County 'campus' on Napier Avenue could eventually have jail, courthouse and other buildings

By SCOTT AIKEN - H-P Staff Writer

BENTON TOWNSHIP - The property bordering Napier Avenue west of Lake Michigan College doesn't look like anything special, a large farm field bordered in places by woods and wetland.

But the pastoral landscape is expected to change late this year when Berrien County breaks ground for a new animal control center.

The building for animals is the first and only definite part of a plan to develop a "campus" of county buildings that could eventually include a jail, courthouse or other structures.

County officials stress that such large-scale and expansive public works projects are years away and may never take place.
The county Board of Commissioners, however, bought the 48.3-acre parcel - far more land than is needed for the animal control office and pound - with an eye to the future.

With several dozen buildings scattered around the county, consolidation would improve the efficiency of various operations and make it easier for the public to get access to services.

Also, some county buildings, notably the jail in St. Joseph, are becoming obsolete.

"Long term, we've got a problem with the jail, and that probably drives this process as much as anything," said county board Chairman Dave Pagel.

A 2005 study found that although the jail, which has a rated capacity of 341 inmates, is clean and well-run, its linear construction style creates potential security problems and requires more deputies to operate than jails of newer designs.

County officials have taken criticism since the land was purchased for what many concede is a bargain price of $725,000, plus a $12,500 real estate firm charge. Critics question the timing of such a capital expenditure during a period of tight funding that is forcing government to retract.

Pagel said he believes the criticism is short-sighted and that the land purchase will give future county boards options to deal with building needs as they arise.

"Sure, it looks right now like we've spent money on a field," Pagel said. "But replacing animal control, which is in awful condition, starts our campus setting."

Unused land can be sold if future boards decide not to pursue the idea.

"For long-term planning it makes beautiful sense," Pagel said. "In the future people are going to be very glad this was done."

He compared the purchase with a decision made years ago by the Berrien Springs School Board to buy vacant land near the Berrien County Youth Fairgrounds. While there were skeptics, the board used the land to develop a campus for all district buildings. Former school property was sold and used for the new public library.

County Administrator Bill Wolf said situating county buildings near each other allows for greater efficiency through common infrastructure, parking areas and services.

The county owns some 50 parcels of property totaling more than 450 acres. Most of the land is in five parks, Silver Beach in St. Joseph, Love Creek in Berrien Township, Madeline Bertrand in Niles Township, Rocky Gap in Benton Township and Galien River in New Buffalo Township.

The Courthouse and sheriff's department, including the jail, occupy about 10 acres, the Juvenile Center property in Berrien Center is on 19.5 acres, the Administration Center in St. Joseph, 1.7 acres, and five health department buildings in Benton Harbor and Benton Township occupy a total of 8.8 acres.

Many existing county buildings "were not built for long-term life expectancy," Wolf said, and when the need for replacement arises, the offices could be moved to the campus.

"We probably won't be here to see what happens with this vision," he said, noting that movement toward the Napier Avenue site may not occur for 50 years. "It establishes something we can work off of."

Impetus for change

The purchase of the Benton Township property arose from the county’s search for a place to build an animal control center to replace the obsolete, 55-year-old building in Berrien Township.

The center houses stray dogs picked up by animal control officers, as required by law, and offers for adoption or destroys unclaimed and unwanted dogs. Although not required by law, the center also houses cats and offers them for adoption.

The county has $1.6 million available for a new center, money gathered over years of fundraisers, and from private contributions and the county general fund.
Directed by the county board, Wolf began searching two years ago for an existing building that could be renovated and used by animal control. No suitable building was found, and Wolf began thinking longer-term.

"I felt the county was at a decision point," he said.

He looked at larger pieces of property that might fit the county's immediate and long-term capital improvement needs. But if the Napier Avenue property had not become available, Wolf said he would have resumed the search for a parcel for animal control only.

The county board approved buying the property from DeLapa Realty in a 9-2 vote last August. The dissenting commissioners, both from the south part of the county, said a more central site should be chosen.

But other commissioners said the property is easily accessible from anywhere in the county. It is a short distance from interchanges to I-94 and the U.S. 31 freeway.

Earlier this year, the county made an agreement with the Andrews University School of Architecture for a master plan to help guide development of the land.

In May, Martin Smith, professor of architecture at the school, and a graduate student presented drawings with two options, and commissioners asked Smith to pursue a "picturesque" arrangement. It would have a meandering road and would separate buildings often used by the public from other structures.

There would be interconnected open-space areas, parking lots kept to the sides and backs of buildings, compact infrastructure and energy-efficient buildings.

Along with development of the 4-acre animal control building and property, the first phase of work calls for construction of a centralized utility building.

The county is writing a request for proposals to find contractors interested in bidding on the animal control center.

A second phase of the plan would consolidate all county health department buildings on the site, followed by construction of a new jail and juvenile center in a third phase.

Wolf said cost and the availability of funding will play a major part in developing a county building campus.

During the past 10 years the county has completed major improvements at the Courthouse in St. Joseph, the South County Building in Niles and other buildings.

More than $7 million was invested in the Courthouse, while $6.1 million in improvements were done in the Niles building. Both projects were completed before 2005.

In 2008 the county did a $1.27 million project to convert a former factory building on East Empire Avenue in Benton Township for use as a 911 dispatch and emergency operations center.

The county maintains a fund for capital improvement projects. It is supported from year to year with money budgeted that is not spent.

Some major projects are funded by selling bonds, and the debt obligations are repaid over a number of years. Taxes were not increased to pay for any of the improvements, but officials say that a project on the scale of building a new jail would likely require a vote of the people to levy a property tax.

An obsolete jail

Sheriff Paul Bailey said the property chosen for a building campus would be right for a new jail, although it probably won't be built for years.

"We're still going to have to put money into the (existing) jail as commissioners try to come up with a game plan to build in 15 to 20 years," Bailey said.

A 2005 study of the jail and other parts of the county's criminal justice system conducted for the National Institute of Corrections by Billy Wasson warned that the facility is becoming obsolete and at the end of its life cycle.
Wasson suggested taking action to build community support for the idea of building a new jail and lining up funding. The NIC is part of the federal Department of Justice, and the consulting help was provided free.

A jail-needs assessment and feasibility study done in 2009 by Wold Architects and Engineers, and Voorhis/Robertson Justice Services, put the cost at $45.5 million for a new 500-bed jail in what are now lots across Port Street from the existing jail.

As an alternative, the study explored the cost of a 160-bed jail for sentenced prisoners on the same property, estimating the cost at $23.7 million, and looked at lower-cost options of renovating and expanding the existing jail.

County officials decided a different site would be preferable. Building on the parking lots would require a multi-floor jail, Bailey said, which would mean higher operational costs.

The original part of the county jail was built in 1951 for 134 prisoners. A major expansion completed in 1981 expanded capacity to 259 beds. By 1993 other renovations, increased staffing and classification system upgrades increased capacity to the current level of 341.

Overcrowding has been a chronic problem for years, although alternative programs and a concentrated control effort by sheriff's officers, the courts and other officials have managed to lower the count over the past year.

The Jail Division of the sheriff's department is an expensive operation, accounting for $8.3 million of the county's $50.9 million general fund budget for 2011.

Bailey said a new jail would likely be built in a pod configuration. Pods comprised of cells and common day room areas adjoin a central control room, like spokes on a wheel, allowing a small number of guards to easily observe a large number of prisoners.

St. Joseph County and Elkhart County in Indiana built jails on that design in recent years, Bailey said.

Building a new jail and courthouse and tearing down the old structures would free up about 10 acres of riverfront property in St. Joseph for development, Bailey said.

In Michigan, Ottawa County, among the first to move to a campus building scheme, has the jail near the juvenile center, Bailey said. Money is saved in food preparation because a common kitchen is shared, he said, and the arrangement cuts costs in other ways.

Old idea, new twist

In developing a county building campus, Berrien County would be going back to the future.

For much of the county's early history the courthouse, jail, sheriff's house and other buildings were near each other on a square in Berrien Springs. The village is centrally located in the county.

The 1839 Courthouse and other 19th-century buildings have been preserved and are maintained by The Berrien County Historical Association. The county seat moved to St. Joseph in 1894, and a new courthouse was built on the corner of Port and Wayne streets.

Demand for county services grew, and by the early 1960s offices were scattered in rented buildings, prompting construction of the current Courthouse next door to the sheriff's department and jail. Most county offices were brought together in the new building in 1966.

Over the years growth and demand for new services outstripped the availability of space in the 106,869-square-foot Courthouse.

The county bought a building on M-139 in Benton Township in 1994 to house some of the overflow offices from the health department buildings in Benton Harbor. The Administration Center on Main Street in St. Joseph, once Washington Elementary School, was purchased in 1998 from Whirlpool Corp.

Out of the county seat

The Michigan Constitution requires four elected officials to maintain their principal offices in the county seat: the sheriff, county clerk, treasurer and register of deeds. But the officials are not prohibited from setting up and running offices in other places.
State statute requires each county to provide a courthouse, sufficient jail and other necessary buildings at the county seat. However, the same law says that a jail can be built anywhere in a county, provided that plans have been approved by the state Department of Corrections.

A number of counties in Michigan, including Cass and Allegan, have moved to a campus scheme that have buildings outside the central business district of the county seat.

Among the first to bring the concept to fruition was Ottawa County, with its county seat in Grand Haven. The county developed a more centrally located campus over the past 20 years.

The county administrative complex near West Olive, between Grand Haven and Holland, has offices of the county clerk, register of deeds, administration, tax equalization, fiscal services, information systems, MSU Extension and others.

Nearby are the county jail, juvenile center, Ottawa County Probate Court and part of the circuit court administration.

Previously, county offices except the sheriff were in Grand Haven, where a new courthouse was recently built.

Ottawa County Administrator Alan Vanderberg said the campus idea grew out of the "unique way the county is situated."

Michigan's eighth-most populous county has separate population centers, and in recent years experienced rapid growth in the south extending from Grand Rapids.

"We had major battles in the '80s on where to locate county facilities," Vanderberg said.

A site in Allendale was considered, but county officials settled on property along Fillmore Street near West Olive that had been set aside for a park.

Development of the campus on some of the land has not interfered with the park development, he said.

The jail was the first part of the administrative complex, which was completed in 1998. A 37,000-square-foot addition was completed two years ago.

While most county offices are situated at the Fillmore center, he said, "we decided to focus services in all four quadrants of the county."

A new district court facility was built in Holland, and the Department of Human Services building in that city was rehabilitated. The new courthouse was constructed in Grand Haven, and the Hudsonville court facility was expanded.

Vanderberg said the county spent $50 million on capital projects since 2003. Some projects were funded through bonding, but property taxes were not increased.

"We have over 30 years of good financial management," he said, and "socked money away in good times."

If you work in an office, keeping neck and shoulder pain away may only take two minutes a day.

A new study presented at the World Congress of the American College of Sports Medicine in Denver found that office workers doing two minutes of exercise a day reported lower levels of neck and shoulder pain after 10 weeks.

The study by Danish researchers involved 198 office workers who had frequent neck and shoulder pain but were otherwise healthy. The workers did either a 2-minute or a 12-minute resistance exercise using elastic tubing. The exercise was a lateral raise, in which the upper arm is raised until it is horizontal and the arms are 10 to 15 inches from the body, says Lars Andersen, the lead researcher.

After 10 weeks, the workers who had performed 2 minutes of daily exercise reported on average a 1.4-point decrease in pain on a 10-point scale. Workers who did 12 minutes of daily exercise had an even lower level of pain, but the difference was not statistically significant.

"We expected there would be a somewhat larger effect in the 12-minute group," Andersen says. The frequency of exercise may be more important than the amount, he adds.

Though the study may give new encouragement to workers to incorporate even small amounts of exercise into their daily routines, the connection between lower levels of pain and exercise is well-documented, says Lynn Miller, a professor of physical therapy at Andrews University in Berrien Springs, who was not involved in the study.

Even short periods of exercise can help loosen up tight muscles and bring the body back into proper alignment, Miller says. Office-induced pain also can be reduced by making sure your workspace is set up properly.

"For office workers, usually posture is not good," Miller says. Arms are often forward for prolonged periods, and reading a computer screen tends to bring the head... into a forward position.

Correct placement of the computer monitor helps create good office ergonomics, College of Sports Medicine fellow Carol Otis says. Ideally, the monitor should be 18 to 24 inches from the face, and the top of the monitor should be at eye level.

Laptop computers present the most problems because they cause users to lean forward the most.

Otis suggests placing a laptop on a three-ring binder or other object to raise it.

Seating also is important, Otis says.

Chairs that allow for several adjustments, including not only height of the chair but also height and angle of armrests, are ideal.

"Have your chair match your body," Otis says.

I actually purchased this bed for my 78 yr. old mother. I went into it knowing I was taking a huge risk for a couple of reasons. One, they have'n't invented a mattress that my mother would find comfortable. Two, I purchased this online with help from customer service. Needless to say, the Sleepy's professional helped me make an excellent purchase at a fantastic price. With financing to boot. Mom's happy, I'm happy and my wallet's happy too. Now we can all sleep at night!

Right for the money
September 1, 2010

Pros: Good for side sleepers, Great value, Good for back sleepers, High quality, Good for stomach sleepers, Supportive
Cons: Softer than expected

This bed was the first purchase of my new apartment and I'm VERY satisfied. The plush eurotop adds the same amount of cushion as a regular Posturepedic Unity Plush bed (I tried laying on both), I just settled for the eurotop for personal reasons as I've always had a eurotop mattress. As for the value, you really can't beat it. The movers delivered it and set it up in 10 minutes and waited for me to lay around and jump on it until I was completely content. If this is your first bed you buy, you won't be sorry--10 year warantee is huge!

Ready for a sleep set with comfort you've only dreamed of? Enter the world of Sealy Posturepedic Palatial Crest Collections.

1. New Dual Support System
   At the heart of the Palatial Crest is the Dual Support System or DSS which provides support not just for the back but the whole body. This is the first sleep system ever to combine cradling comfort and orthopaedically correct support - so it works not just for the back, but for the whole body.

2. New Microtek Foundation
   The Palatial Crest foundation system has also been totally redesigned. The breakthrough MicroTek technology delivers Sealy's most durable foundation ever, a foundation that is ten times more durable than any conventional foundation.

3. New Generation Comfort
   And to top off this technology, Sealy has introduced a range of exciting new comfort features - from luxuriously deep soft quilting to unique comfort combinations and fashion fittings, guaranteed to appeal to the discerning bedding buyer.

This new technology is a major breakthrough, but how will it benefit you?

Consider these major benefits.

The Dual Support System combines two kinds of support. It combines the deep down, orthopaedically correct support of the Posturetech core and the cushioning comfort of the Syner-flex surface which micro adjusts to cradle every curve and contour of your body, reducing pressure areas and delivering a better night’s sleep.

The new MicroTek Foundation provides unparalleled support and durability. It is a steel beam construction based on Microspan Support Elements made from 'space age', fibreglass reinforced polymer composites. Designed and patented by Sealy, these 'living hinges' can withstand more than a million compressions without fatigue or loss of resilience. This means your Palatial Crest foundation has more than ten times the life of any previous foundation system.
The new generation Comfort Features offer new heights of fashion, comfort and visual appeal. The exclusive deep quilted patterning, the new internal comfort combinations, and the pewter look appointments combine to create a strong visual attraction that emphasises the deep seated luxurious comfort this system will provide for the whole body.
