Call for Graduate Women Scholarship Applications for 2012-2013

2012-2013 Women's Scholarship Committee Scholarship applications for graduate women students are available in paper form at the Administrative Assistant's desk in the English Department in Nethery Hall or through e-mail attachment by writing Dr. Stella Greig at greigs@andrews.edu. Please put "WSC Scholarships" in the subject line. Completed applications are due March 15, 2012.

There are two kinds of application forms. One form is for the Steele Scholarship, which is for women who have served as cross-cultural missionaries at least 4 years and who are working on a graduate degree in any of the university schools. The other form is a general application.

General application forms will be considered for several different named scholarships (which have their own criteria—e.g., must be: a Seminary student, a School of Education in educational or counseling psychology student or a student working on a music degree), as well as the more general WSC Advisory Scholarship and Honored Women Scholarship. To give applicants the best chance to receive an award, the committee will determine for which scholarship an application fits best.

New Team Members in the Office of Human Resources
The Office of Human Resources has recently had some staffing changes that include two new additions to their team.

Maria Velez is the new payroll supervisor in the Office of Human Resources. She is replacing Amy Waller who left in December 2011. Velez most recently worked as the administrative assistant/service records assistant in that office. She has a Bachelor of Business Administration with a concentration in finance and a Master of Business Administration, both from Andrews University.

Inez A. Reyes is the new administrative assistant/service records assistant in the Office of Human Resources. She replaces Maria Velez. Reyes most recently worked as a certified pharmacy technician (CphT) for Family Fare Pharmacy in Dowagiac, Mich. Previously, she has worked as a mentor manager in the MARK mentoring program at Mildred C. Wells Academy in Benton Harbor, Mich.; a concierge for Errand Solutions in Elmhurst, Ill.; and an assistant sales director for AmeriSuites, Itasca, Ill. She has a Bachelor of Business Administration from South Carolina State University and a Master of Media Communication from Governors State University in University Park, Ill.

Tiffani Grigsby is the new employment/benefits manager in the Office of Human Resources. She replaces Katrina Wright-Rayhill. Grigsby most recently worked as a human resource generalist for Cancer CarePartners of Mishawaka, Ind., and prior to that, she filled the same role at Goshen Health System in Goshen, Ind. She has a Bachelor of Business Management and is currently studying for her master's in business management with a specialization in human resources, both from Indiana Wesleyan University. After living in Goshen, Ind., for 12 years, Grigsby relocated to Berrien Springs in December 2011.

The Office of Human Resources includes Payroll, Benefits, Employment and Training & Development. It is located on the second floor of the Administration Building.

Susan Mbaluka Releases Biography

Susan Mbaluka, a doctoral candidate in educational leadership at Andrews University, has just published her biography, God Makes a Way. The book traces Susan's childhood in a small village in Kenya and her struggle to develop faith in God instead of the local witch doctors. As her faith grew, so did the trials she faced. Mbaluka describes how the devil tried to discourage, tempt, and kill her. She writes of her quest to gain an education and her struggles with loneliness, and hopes that the book will encourage its readers "to trust God because He is faithful, and all His promises are true." Mbaluka’s book is available from TEACH Services, Inc., Amazon.com, and other local retailers.

Architecture Missions Group (AMG) Helps Rebuild Haiti

A group of School of Architecture, Art & Design students, faculty and community members, including alums, traveled to Haiti Jan. 15–24, 2012, to volunteer their time and sweat in rebuilding the campus of Adventist University of Haiti (UNAH). The campus was severely damaged in the Jan. 12, 2010, earthquake. Since then, a number of Andrews University entities have offered ongoing support to rebuild the campus, including the Department of Physical Therapy, the Department of Behavioral Sciences and the Office of Campus Safety. Newly Renamed School of Architecture, Art & Design Offering 3 New Programs

Beginning in the 2012-13 academic year, the School of Architecture will become the School of Architecture, Art & Design. Three new degree programs, Interior Design, Construction Management and Documentary Film, will be added to the school's offerings.

According to Carey Carscallen, dean of the School of Architecture, Art & Design, no other Seventh-day Adventist educational institution offers a four-year degree in building construction management or any programs focused on interior design.

"The church needs workers who understand its beliefs of simplicity, creativity, building and designing for the glory of God. Like other secular universities with construction management and interior design programs, our students will gain understanding of everything related to the profession. However, unlike others, they will..."

Suspects questioned in connection with Berrien County car break-ins

Police are questioning two people in connection with a string of car break-ins in Berrien County.

Police are questioning two people in connection with a string of car break-ins in Berrien County.

Berrien Springs Oronoko Township Police officers responded to six car break-ins around Berrien Springs, Andrews University and Oronoko Township last Friday.

Using video surveillance, officers were able to identify the suspects and their getaway vehicle.

After interviewing both individuals, police say they admitted to breaking into cars in the Meier Hall parking lot on the Andrews University campus.

"A religious institution such as ours often shuts down in many ways on a Friday afternoon. There's not as much activity, there's no classes and such so it's very unusual to happen here," university spokeswoman Kari Suarez said.

Police have also connected the duo to a rash of break-ins throughout Baroda Lake Township early Saturday morning.

There investigators say the crooks broke into 25 cars parked along 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th Streets, in addition to the Baroda Estates Mobile Home Park.

Some of the stolen items, including a few hundred dollars in cash and electronics, were recovered in Hickory Creek and nearby front yards in the days since.

Police also recovered a window punch they say the two used to break in the glass on cars. That window punch is shown in the photo attached with this story.

One of the suspect vehicles that police say was used during the break-ins was also seized by officials.

The identities of the two suspects are not being released at this time.

Police remind residents to lock their cars. A quarter of vehicle thefts, including many in this story, stem from people not doing so.

Secondly, conceal all evidence of valuables. That included power plugs, iPod adapters and GPS suction cup mounts.

Finally, keep your windows and sunroofs completely closed. Not doing so could cause your car alarm’s pressure sensor to malfunction and not activate should someone break-in.

The One Project Gathering in Seattle Attracts 700

By John McLarty

The One Project held its second American gathering February 13 and 14, 2012, in Seattle. About 700 people spent two days at the Westin Hotel in downtown Seattle. They came from all over the U. S. and from Canada, the U.K., Australia, New Zealand, Hungary, Norway, Brazil, Denmark, Switzerland. The majority were church employees—pastors, church administrators, teachers, editors. There were over a hundred students, mostly college, but also a few from academies. There were a fair number of clergy spouses and laity. Each day's program included several sermons and extensive time in small groups around tables.

What was the purpose of the gathering? From the One Project website: "We are committed to the idea that a Jesus-driven, Jesus-bathed, Jesus-backed, Jesus-led, Jesus-filled, Jesus-powered, all-about-Jesus Adventist Church is the uncompromising directive from our past, the joy of our present, and hope for our future. We claim the Primal Adventist Impulse: a longing to be with Jesus. ... The One Project seeks - through gatherings, conversations, web-based content, and Christ-focused publications - to stimulate preaching, worship, and adoration of Jesus within and through the Adventist church." The slogan of the organizers is, “Jesus. All.”

The first day's sermons focused on moments in Adventist history: 1844 (the early Adventists eagerly anticipated meeting their Savior), 1888 (a precious message about Jesus), 1957 (the book, Questions on Doctrine, attempted to place Jesus and the gospel more squarely in the center of our faith). The second day's sermons considered the role of Jesus in Adventist doctrines and Jesus in the church community.

Most of the sermons included significant references to contemporary controversies in the church, so I would expect people to evaluate the actual content of the sermons differently depending on their points of view. But for sheer force and effectiveness in communication, the preaching was superlative.

The speakers repeatedly called for the church to make Jesus central in everything, from our preaching to our policy making, from our identity as a people to our message as an organization. They easily demonstrated that Adventists through the decades have prized their relationship with Jesus. A comment by James White late in his life, formed the centerpiece of one sermon, "I have an unutterable yearning of the soul for Christ.” From the very beginning Jesus has been central for Adventists. Jesus, not doctrine. Jesus, not prophetic scenarios. Jesus, not rules about food or clothes or Sabbath keeping. The reason for our existence is first, last and always Jesus.

Many of the speakers voiced concern that this centrality of Jesus—a value they argued ought to be a given for a Christian church—was threatened by a number of elements in Adventist culture. In fact, sometimes it is challenged by the culture itself. We risk becoming so engrossed with our own identity and mission that the person of Jesus is obscured. The speakers cited a variety of instances where this obscuring of Jesus has occurred in Adventist history. Many of their challenges can be supported by direct quotations from Ellen White. But they did not stop with the failures of yesteryear. They spoke pointedly to practices and policies in today's church that seem incompatible with the mission and person of Jesus.

It is common in Adventist circles for people to argue we should read only Adventist authors (which, of course, means our ministers could not learn Hebrew or Greek because the grammars and lexicons were not written by Adventists). One speaker showed slides of various pages in the Seventh-day Adventist hymnal with the author's names highlighted. The Adventist hymn includes hymns written by ancient and medieval monks, Methodists, Anglicans, Catholics, Quakers, Beethoven and Anonymous, among others. In fact, 85 percent of the hymns in the Seventh-day Adventist Hymnal were written by people outside the Adventist community. Did we really think our worship would be better if we eliminated all these non-Adventist voices? He answered his own question: No! The audience roared with laughing approval.

There was similar vocal audience approval when several speakers wondered how we could imagine that Jesus would exclude women when he so pointedly contradicted the mores of his day to include them. Could we really imagine that Jesus had intended the leaders of his church to use their institutional power to keep others “in their place?” I did no survey, but my read of the mood of the crowd was that the vast majority shared the speakers' views on these issues.

On the other hand, some participants were expressed puzzlement at what they saw as a difference between the advertised focus of the gathering and the apparent focus of the preaching. They felt the church and its problems had somewhat eclipsed Jesus as the center of attention. These folks agreed with the critiques of church policy, but they felt a dissonance between their experience in Seattle and their expectations based on the advertising. Everyone who mentioned this dissonance to me was over forty. The reactions among younger people, both clergy and students, appeared to be universally positive. They heard the speakers giving voice to their concerns, saying what Jesus would say in our context. Many of these young people said the experience gave them renewed hope for their church.

When I asked Alex Bryan about the concern of older attendees that “issues” received too much attention, he said this: “This year's gathering called the church to consider how our human relationships are impacted by Jesus. How we treat one another. How we affirm the spiritual calling of both men and women. How we relate to one another across cultural and racial borders. These issues are uncomfortable--I know they are for me! But Jesus challenged the church of his day with these issues as central to what it means to follow him. We cannot talk about Jesus without talking about what he talked about.”

Reaction from church administrators I talked to (all over fifty) reflected the generational divide. They, too, voiced strong exception to some of the current initiatives and policies in the denomination. Still, they did not think this gathering was an appropriate venue for addressing issues of church governance. They argued these issues should be handled “in-house.” Young preachers should leave these matters to “proper church authorities.” Washington Conference president, John Freedman was concerned because he had invited many people to the gathering, including young people and people new to the church. As a pastor, he worried some of these vulnerable people might be unsettled by what they heard. On the other hand, the younger pastors in his conference told him they were energized and encouraged by the gathering.

Both in their public presentations and in private conversations, the leaders of the One Project evince an intense commitment to the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Like James and Ellen White, Taylor Bunch, H.M.S. Richards, Sr., and Morris Venden before them, their commitment to Jesus is supreme over all and is the ultimate spring of their preaching.

The next gathering of the One Project in the United States will be in Chicago in February, 2013. It will include live translation into Spanish. According to the organizers, over a 100 have already registered. The focus in Chicago will be the four gospels. Eight speakers will explore Jesus through words of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John.

John McLarty is a former editor of Adventist Today and a pastor in the Washington Conference near Seattle.
Thanks for the concise update, John. As a theology student, I wish I could have been up there for this event to better gauge the direction our leadership is taking us in the next few years.

Was this a concrete demonstration of the generational divide in the church?

Joe Erwin

Personally, I very much like to see unification movements (I'm currently trying to make physicians, veterinarians, and others whose work includes or informs the health sciences, aware of the One Health Initiative). I would like to see Christians be more devoted to the principles attributed to Jesus and less intent on doctrinal division and traditions of strife. The fragmentation of Christianity is one of its least attractive aspects, and one that seriously detracts from its credibility.

One wonders, however, how SDAs can handle Christian unification, give the profound commitment to being "a peculiar people," with unusual, and in some cases, rather brittle, traditions. There is sure to be some paranoid reaction to calls for unity as some sort of "time of the end" indicator. Even so, let's hope that a unity movement can inspire people within the church to be more open to interaction and conversations with people outside the SDA church, even if only with other Christians.

"1957 (the book, Questions on Doctrine, attempted to place Jesus and the gospel more squarely in the center of our faith)."

Who is kidding whom? This book did not reflect Adventism then nor does it now. Is the viewpoint with respect to QOD McLarty's view or that of One Project? If the latter it immediately raises serious questions.

Joe Erwin
8 days ago

I recall very well when the book came out, and that it stimulated much discussion. I graduated from academy in 1958 and went off to PUC that Fall. Those who were there during that era will recall that many of our professors left within a short span of time.

If the book inaccurately reflects adventism, is there a more accurate source? I get the sense that the church has continued to fracture and fragment across the more than 40 years since I was a part of it, almost to the point of shattering. One wonders if any volume could accurately reflect all the many and diverse faces of adventism. Doesn't it seem like the time has come for a unification effort? Or, is it just too late?

Elaine Nelson
8 days ago

It would be possible to unify if there were a very few tenets that are held in common. Most of the 28 are peripheral to the Gospel and only confuse what should be the central doctrine: Jesus Christ. All doctrines... should answer the question: How does this lead one to Jesus Christ and is it essential for salvation?

Kevin Riley
8 days ago

Elaine,
Have you read the 28 recently? I wouldn't say that 'most' are 'peripheral to the gospel'. I would also be saddened if Christianity were to be reduced to the question 'is it essential for salvation?' Christianity is as much, if not more, about living a saved life as it is about a - often self-centred - focus on 'salvation'.

8 days ago

Much of QOD did and does reflect SDA beliefs. That there were some problems are obvious to (almost) everyone. We also should not assume that because in one or two places it struck out on what were, for most SDAs, new directions does not mean it was necessarily wrong. One reason we have resisted (until recently) the idea of having a creed is the long-standing SDA belief that it is wrong to set our beliefs in concrete as that does not allow God to lead us in new ways. There is no doubt that QOD did not, and perhaps still does not, reflect the majority view on the nature of Christ. But the current consensus does not follow either of the views current in the 1950s. But apart from the nature of Christ and the place of sanctification in salvation, what else is in dispute?

Elaine Nelson
8 days ago

Kevin, Yes, I have a copy of the 28 handy by my computer and consult it often. When Christianity began it was far more simple but as the years progressed more and more tenets were adopted and there seems to be no end.

Would you care to list those that are "not essential to salvation" and why Christianity and Adventism requires so much more. There are many qualities in life that one may possess but in defining what it means to be a Christian should not take such a large book. Compared to the early church it is as large as an encyclopedia and no one has shown that it makes people either better or more worthy of salvation.

We should strive to live fully here today, but if there is no focus on salvation, why be a Christian or an Adventist?

L. Humberto Covarrubias

The Question is, as i understand it: What kind of God is Christ whom we worship? One that will fulfill our selfishness even in our having eventually eternal life or One that will lead us to value nothing more than the freedom of our fellow created beings, His children?

William Noel
8 days ago

How can we expect long-term impact and benefit from such meetings if the majority of those attending are church leaders who in a few years will be fading into retirement? This sounds a lot like a campmeeting moved to an upscale venue. People want something new, but have they really found it?
To William: I don't think it's accurate to say "the majority" were leaders near retirement. I'd say the median age was about forty -- half over that, half under that. I did not count, but this was my impression.

William Noel
6 days ago

John, Please forgive my erroneous projection of local observations about church leaders onto that attendance. Let me reposition the question: Given the historic orientation of church leadership toward the defense and preservation of traditionalism as contrasted with the amount of non-traditional creativity and attitudes among the remaining youth in our church, what long-term result do you expect from such gatherings?

John McLarty
6 days ago

William: What long-term result do I expect, given our habits of defense and preservation? The most I hope for (and this is a realistic hope, I think) is that individuals and networks of individuals will find renewed vitality in their spiritual life. Churches (not just the Adventist Church) are by definition conservative. They attempt to pass on the knowledge and experience of the past. The job of each generation is to extract from that heritage what is useful in carrying forward the mission of Jesus. Difficulty arises as preservationists and innovators each claim that preservation and innovation respectively is the essential work of Jesus. I think the work of Jesus is most likely to be found somewhere in the tension between the two. I see no historical example of a denomination navigating this successfully in the long run.

J. David Newman

I was present and found the conference the most inspiring I have attended in the past 40 years. It renewed my faith in Adventism That Jesus will become central. He is in our church but he is not central... I expect to see at least 1400 at the next conference. Doctrines are only relevant if they tell me something about Jesus.

Jack Hoehn
4 days ago

I hope we all hear this. I suspect J. David Newman has been to say 52x40= 2.000 or more meetings by conservative estimate? The BEST out of 2,000 is not faint praise! Makes me sorry I missed this one and very interested in sending my children to the next one.

Ervin Taylor

It would seem to me that any Christian would welcome a focus that places Jesus at the center of the life and mission of the church. However, might I suggest that one question that someone might want to address is which Jesus are you to place at the center? Two thousand years of Christian history and hundreds of different groups that claim to be his followers have created a whole range of different images--all with the name of Jesus attached.

Is he going to be the “real” Jesus of history or the Jesus created by the faith of later followers? Is the Jesus to be... placed at the center going to be a radical revolutionary? Is he going to be the “meek and mild” Jesus? Is he going to be the miracle worker Jesus? Or, is he going to be the sectarian Jewish Jesus or should he be the Jesus of Paul? Or perhaps, the Jesus of the Book of Hebrews? Or will he be the Jesus that speaks in Book of Revelation?

Will he be the Jesus that totally ignored social customs of his day and brought women into his inner circle? Or will he be the Jesus that later gospel writers managed to make sure that all of his disciples were male?

Since we are concerned with Adventist Christianity, we might ask: Shall the Jesus we are going to place at the center, the Jesus of the early Ellen White or the later Ellen White? Perhaps it should be the Jesus of Graham Maxwell. (Personally, that is the one that has my vote, but who’s voting?)

I guess some will suggest the best way to deal with this issue is to ignore it and just think warm and spiritual thoughts. That certainly would be one approach. If this is the preferred way, then I guess I should not have brought this up in the first place.

William Noel

Ervin,
Pursuing Jesus is among the most noble things we can do in our entire lives. But that isn't what He told us to do. There is much more to God than Jesus, who told us to pursue the Holy Spirit and the empowerment for ministry that we saw displayed most dramatically in the Apostolic Church, and who would be seen again in that power prior to the return of Jesus. So, why so much focus on Jesus who is to return instead of the God who is here now and promises to live inside us so we can do His will?
I think the One Project is terrific, just not doing what Jesus told us to do.

Stephen Foster
5 days ago

Dr. Taylor,
Since you did bring this up, and since you made it a point to identify the Jesus for whom you would vote
(Graham Maxwell’s version); would you provide a description—yourself—of Him?

Ervin Taylor
4 days ago

May I direct Mr. Foster to two books by Dr. Maxwell" "Servants or Friends?" (1992) and "Can God be Trusted?" (1978) for a reasonable description although there are several aspects of his reasonble descriptions about which I would have to ask questions. If we all took Dr. Maxwell's approach (while not neccessarily accepting all of his conclusions), contemporary Adventism would be in a lot better shape than it is today.

Stephen Foster
4 days ago

Allow me to be candid with Dr. Taylor and suggest that it is highly unlikely that I will be accessing those books anytime in the near future; for no other reason than I am not sufficiently interested or motivated to do so.

This is why I asked Dr. Taylor to provide a description, himself, of his preferred version, if you will, of Jesus.
I would like to think we are dialoguing on this site with one another, as opposed to each other’s favorite authors.

I'm sorry that Mr. Foster is not sufficiently interested or motivated to read the suggested books. That is his loss. Even though I am honored by his request, I'm afraid that it would take too much space to provide my own description since one would need to do a lot of nuancing of statements. Thus my suggestion of the two books by Dr. Maxwell who has laid out his views in a very reasonable and readable manner for an Adventist audience. Right now, I can think of no better way of addressing the topic that he has done.

Stephen Foster
4 days ago

I don’t get it. Dr. Taylor made a point to voluntarily identify varying versions of Jesus; as well as the type or version of Jesus whom He prefers (in a five paragraph post, no less).

It would not seem too much to ask for a brief description of the attributes of this particular version of Jesus that Dr. Taylor finds so appealing; comparatively.

Kevin Riley

Stephen

The issues addressed in those books - and others - go to the heart of many of our current 'discussions'. Aside from the discussion here, they are worth reading simply to be able to engage intelligently with others on these issues. You seem to have an interest in a number of the issues raised by Maxwell and others, so I am surprised you say you have neither the interest nor the motivation to read them. I am not questioning your decision not to read every book suggested by anyone - the multitude of books not worth reading seems to grow daily - but these two books are definitely worth reading and devoting some time to considering the POV presented. You may, like me, decide there are answers that are equally as good, if not better, but to not read books on subjects you have indicated an interest in seems odd to me.

Stephen Foster
4 days ago

OK, I’ll stipulate to the faults of parsimony, laziness, and being set in my ways. So, why not simply provide me with a “CliffsNotes” version of the Maxwellian variation of Jesus that Dr. Taylor admittedly favors over the other variations he mentioned.

He broached the subject. I am just requesting that he—or, at this point, anyone else who is at all familiar with this description of Jesus—synopsize it. (We are talking about Jesus, aren’t we?)

Kevin Riley
4 days ago

To give a short synopsis of a man's life work seems somewhat mean, but basically the message is that Jesus is sent to reveal God's love. As we respond to that love, God heals us. I don't argue with that, or with the many good reasons Maxwell gives for believing that is the focus of the gospels. I just believe that, for once, the advertisers are right - 'but wait, there's more!' I don't believe in interpreting all of the Bible through the 'forensic' or 'Christus Victor' or any other theme or motif, but they are there, and should not be ignored. Rather than fitting any into a unitary view that fails to do justice to the richness of the gospel, it is better to allow all a place of equality within our thought.

Stephen Foster

Thanks, Kevin! I wasn’t asking for a synopsis of Maxwell’s life’s work. (I could look on Wikipedia for that.) I just wanted a synopsis of his representation of Jesus; which Ervin professedly regards so highly.

Ervin, I agree 100%.

Certainly, Graham Maxwell presented an admirable God Jesus.

I knew Graham Maxwell while I was at PUC and took Greek from him. It seemed to me at the time that he was an exemplary individual--in every way, as far as I could tell. He seemed to me to be an outstanding spokesperson for adventism, Christianity, and God. And his Dad, "Uncle Arthur" was such a funny, good-humored man. Anyone, in any walk of life or in any faith, would benefit from including such people.

Ella M
4 days ago

As a young secretary in the religion department at LLU, I knew Graham Maxwell as the department chairman. Because of my years there I learned about my own denomination. Dr. Maxwell and the other faculty: R A Anderson who had worked on the QOD book, Ted Heppenstall, J. Provonsha, D. Baldwin were top theologians of the time. They had different approaches. I appreciated them all, and they fed a growing desire to learn. There had friendly debates over their differences on some theological subjects; but there was never any disparaging of each others' views. They all had valuable contributions; some more evangelical; others more intellectual. That is still my approach--learn from many views with an open mind while not accepting one individual's (or institutional) perceptions one hundred percent.

I pray Project One turns out to be a true "revival" in the deepest sense of the word (not shallow). That will mean addressing some of the relationship issues that Christ addressed when he was here. It means letting current theological debates be our personal choices and not divisive. (IJ, nature of Christ, sanctuary, etc.)

For a better understanding of QOD go to http://qod.andrews.edu/downloads.html Then take your pick. I would suggest listening to Larry Kirkpatrick's exposition. He states it created definite problems.
Kevin Riley
3 days ago

It would pay to read or listen to a number of presentations, as most presenters were coming from a particular POV. As Kirkpatrick supports a number of positions that were not represented in QOD, it is perhaps not surprising he sees it as causing problems. One of the best examinations of the issues is found in George Knight's notes to the recent re-release of QOD. It is amazing how many people have strong opinions on QOD without ever having read it.

Jeffery named to Berrien Springs school board

By DEBRA HIGHT - H-P Correspondent
Published: Saturday, February 18, 2012 1:06 PM EST

BERRIEN SPRINGS - The Berrien Springs school board is back to full strength with the appointment this week of a new board member to replace Lyndon "Jerry" Furst, who resigned last month.

James Jeffery, the dean of the undergraduate school of education at Andrews University, is the new member. He was appointed Thursday. Jeffery has lived in Berrien Springs since 1999, and he and his wife, Donna, have thee grown sons. He will serve on the board until November, when the seat will be up for election.

Jeffery said he applied for the vacant board seat because he is a good friend of Furst and hasn't decided yet whether he will run for election in November. Furst is a retired dean of the graduate school at Andrews.

Board President Peg Bormann and Secretary Pat DeLong said the board received several applications for the position. They said the board's personnel committee interviewed applicants on Feb. 9 and 13 before making a recommendation to the full board.

Furst's resignation also left an opening among the board officers because he had been treasurer. Board members voted to appoint Trustee Ron Marschke as treasurer.
The annual gathering of The One Project has its roots in Japhet De Oliveira’s 2009 cancer diagnosis, which he says was a wake-up call.

With the threat of a worsening sickness looming over him, De Oliveira met with a support group for two days in a Denver hotel in 2010. He and four fellow pastors revealed and examined issues in their lives. Now, his cancer in remission, De Oliveira has seen that small group grow into an annual gathering of hundreds of Seventh-day Adventists seeking to reconnect with Jesus in their personal and corporate worship.

This year’s gathering of The One Project on February 13 and 14 brought more than 700 people to Seattle for conversations on practical applications of Jesus’ ministry in their own lives, churches and communities. De Oliveira hopes it’s an environment where people can honestly look at their own priorities, examine the core of Christianity, and promote Jesus in their theology as Seventh-day Adventists.

For some, it’s a place to challenge and even question one’s own beliefs.

“We’re trying to create a safe place to say Jesus is the center of our church and always has been,” said De Oliveira, chaplain for missions at Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Michigan. He’s especially looking to support those who may become frustrated with the church.

“We love our church. I really do believe that God has called the Seventh-day Adventist Church and I’m tired of losing people when we work so hard to bring them in,” he said.

The One Project is short on programming and long on discussions. De Oliveira says the event format grew out of his wish to make a gathering similar to the best part of the numerous conferences he attends each year – talking with people individually. A small stage is set in the middle of a banquet room and speakers are allowed 20 minutes to present. The event is then
Lisa Clark Diller, chair of the Department of History at Southern Adventist University, reads from the Bible at The One Project in Seattle, February 14. “I was born into a Seventh-day Adventist home, an environment where we knew Adventists were ‘right’. Since then, I’ve learned the wisdom of having Jesus and being right,” she said. [photo: Darren Heslop]

Dr. David Kim, a family practice physician from Atlanta, said The One Project gathering was long overdue. “I grew up in a legalistic Adventist culture where the three R’s dominated – rules, regulations, and rituals. Missing was the biggest R of Christianity – a relationship with Jesus.”

The original meeting in Denver in July of 2010 brought the five pastors together for support and soul searching. De Oliveira admits he had “sort of lost [his] way,” focusing on success as a pastor and not caring enough for his family or health. “I would only read the Bible to prepare sermons,” he said.

The original five were De Oliveira; Leonor; Alex Bryan, pastor of Walla Walla University Church; Tim Gillespie, young adult pastor at Loma Linda Church; and Terry Swenson, senior chaplain at Loma Linda University.

It was a real honest conversation,” De Oliveira said. “Some crying and a lot of praying. We said, ‘let’s do this at least once a year.’”

The group agreed to meet annually to focus on Jesus. Each invited friends for a similar meeting the following year in Atlanta. More than 170 people showed up.

For that 2011 gathering in Atlanta, participants may not have fully understood what they were coming to, De Oliveira said. They were each asked to read the four gospels and the book Desire of Ages, authored by Adventist Church co-founder Ellen G. White. The invitation then was simply, “Come have a two-day conversation about Jesus.”

The conversation continues later this year in Australia and Denmark, and next year in Chicago. For more information, visit: the1project.org.

Berrien Springs Camera Club

Wednesday, Mar. 7
7 p.m., Berrien Springs Community Library

The monthly meeting of the Berrien Springs Camera Club will offer a unique, informal program on Wednesday, Mar. 7, at 7 p.m. at the Berrien Springs Community Library at Cass and Union Road.

For several years now, Jim Lynch, one of the club members, who holds membership also in the Twin Cities Camera Club, has taken honors in most of the club's bimonthly competitions. Jim has agreed to simply tell us how he does it during the meeting. While showing some of his favorite images, he will informally discuss his methods for getting good pictures, his equipment, and his favorite locations for his exceptional bird portraits, lighthouse shots, landscape scenes and other images.

All are welcome to attend. Refreshments will be served.
