Costume Assistant Needed for Passion Play

Costuming is a fun place where the actors come alive in costume. Assistants are needed to attend orientation, help at fittings, and assist the day(s) of Passion Play.

Orientation: All assistants must attend one orientation before helping at the fittings. It is extremely busy at the fittings and there is no time for instruction. At orientation instruction is given on where the different types of costumes are in the room. It is demonstrated on how to fit and reserve the costumes for the actors, and how to wear the different parts of the various types of costumes. Orientation is March 25, 5:30-6:30 and Sunday, March 31, 11 a.m. before the fitting.

Fittings: At the fittings, the costume assistant helps actors choose and reserve a costume for their character, assists them in trying it on, makes sure all costume pieces are there, and that it fits the actor well. Fittings are March 26 and 27, 5:15 – 7:15 pm, March 31, 12-4 pm, April 2 and 3, 5:15-7:15 pm.

Day(s) of Passion Play: Assist actors in getting dressed, tying belts, helping with headpieces and making sure actors look their best for their part. Assistants may take breaks during the day, join the potluck, and may go through and experience the Passion Play. Assistants especially help in putting away costumes at the end of the day(s).

If you know of someone who could take this role please contact Betty Whitehead.

Passion Play is April 6 & 7

Now in it's tenth year, the 2013 Andrews University Passion Play will be open for two days, Saturday, April 6 and Sunday, April 7, 2013. This marks a significant scheduling change moving Passion Play from Easter Sunday, March 31, 2013, to the first weekend in April.

Date Change
"There have been years when Easter weekend fell immediately before or after Spring Break, finals and even graduation, making it very challenging schedule-wise for the hundreds of students, staff and faculty volunteers for Passion Play," says Japhet De Oliveira, University chaplain and Passion Play producer, of the date change. "Likewise, Easter weekend can be a very busy time for families. We'd like to see this scheduling change provide new opportunities for members of the community to experience the Andrews University Passion Play."

Smaller Rotation Sizes
Also new to the 2013 Passion Play are smaller group rotations limited to 300 guests each. "The Passion Play tells an incredibly powerful story, but if you are lost in a sea of people, you can feel disconnected and even miss key parts of the story," says De Oliveira. "We will be limiting each group rotation to 300 in order to create a more personal experience for each person who attends. To add to the ambiance of the Passion Play while also helping with crowd control, we'll have Roman guards at several checkpoints checking wristbands."

Passion Play wristband reservations open up March 1, 2013. Wristbands will be available for pick-up at the first scene and can be reserved online for free at www.andrews.edu/passionplay. Reservations are required.

The Herald-Palladium: Fighting a stereotype

Area experts are skeptical new mental health measures will reduce gun violence, though they welcome President Obama's proposals to prevent, detect and treat mental illness.

The skepticism is rooted in the fact that the majority of violent crimes are not committed by people with a mental illness, including bipolar disorders, chronic depression and schizophrenia.

"It's important for the public to realize that mental illness does not equate with dangerous violence," said Duane McBride, chairman of the Department of Behavioral Sciences at Andrews University and chairman of the Berrien County Board of Health.

Andrews Named on U.S. News & World Report's "Overperforming Schools" List

U.S. News has published a first-ever analysis of colleges in their National Universities ranking category that are overperforming or underperforming their undergraduate academic reputations in terms of their overall Best Colleges 2013 rankings. This concept measures the degree to which a university's overall position in the rankings exceeds or falls short of its undergraduate academic reputation rank. Andrews University is named on that list. Read the full story here.

Area experts are skeptical new mental health measures will reduce gun violence, though they welcome President Obama's proposals to prevent, detect and treat mental illness.

The skepticism is rooted in the fact that the majority of violent crimes are not committed by people with a mental illness, including bipolar disorders, chronic depression and schizophrenia.

"It's important for the public to realize that mental illness does not equate with dangerous violence," said Duane McBride, chairman of the Department of Behavioral Sciences at Andrews University and chairman of the Berrien County Board of Health. "In most, by far the majority, of violent crimes committed, there is not a diagnosable mental illness. Most of the violence committed by those with a mental illness is committed against themselves and not against the public."

There are an estimated 31,000 gun deaths in the United States each year. Two-thirds of those are suicides, most with handguns, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control.

After the Sandy Hook Elementary School massacre in December and other mass shootings, President Obama made a number of recommendations to bolster the country's treatment of mental illness, along with proposals for stricter gun control measures.

The president's mental health proposals include putting more counselors and psychologists in schools, providing mental health first aid training for teachers and other professionals, and offering referrals and treatment for young people who exhibit symptoms of a mental illness.

"Funding, early intervention, helping people to understand and identify those who have problems, that can make a difference, that can matter," said Curtis VanderWaal, chairman and professor of social work at Andrews and a board member at Riverwood Center in Benton Township, Berrien County's mental health provider. "Ultimately, that would be a good thing for our society."

But it's not going to stop the shooting, they said.

"Will this help reduce violence? No," said Harvey Burnett, an assistant professor of psychology at Andrews and a Buchanan policeman. "We still have the guns out there, we're leaving the guns out on the street. We're still combatting a level of violence that is acceptable in the United States."

That tolerance is fueled by violent video games, movies and TV shows, Burnett said.

The odds

Burnett agreed with his colleagues that violent crime is infrequently committed by the mentally ill. Only 3 to 5 percent of violent crimes are committed by a person with a mental illness. People with no mental disorder who abuse alcohol or drugs are nearly seven times as likely as those without substance abuse to exhibit violent behavior.

Studies show that most mental illnesses first occur in a person's teens or early 20s, making early detection and treatment important. But fewer than half of the young people experiencing these problems are getting treatment.

Even with mental health screenings, predicting the next shooting spree is like trying to guess the location of a lightning strike.

"It's virtually impossible to predict ahead of time who will be violent," VanderWaal said. "There are a lot of angry people out there, and a lot of angry people have access to guns, but actually very few who act on their anger. ... But while we cannot predict (who will become violent) early intervention can reduce the potential pool of problem makers."

Having access to guns can increase the risk of suicide, by making the means readily available for what is typically an impulsive act, VanderWaal said.

According to the New England Journal of Medicine, among people who made near-lethal suicide attempts, 24 percent took fewer than five minutes to make the decision to try to kill themselves, and 70 percent took less than an hour.

Not only are people with a mental illness more of a danger to themselves than others, they also are at greater risk for being the victim of a violent crime.

According to U.S. Bureau of Justice statistics, more than one quarter of persons with a severe mental illness had been victims of a violent crime in the past year, a rate more than 11 times higher than the general population.

Substance abuse

McBride said alcohol and drug abuse is a big contributing factor to violent behavior, as it affects judgment and impulse control.

A 1997 survey by the U.S. Department of Justice found that more than half of state and federal prison inmates who were doing time for murder reported that they were under the influence of alcohol or drugs when they committed their offense. The majority had used guns in their crimes. Substance abuse also is a factor in the majority of domestic violence deaths.

Burnett said that while substance abuse plays a large role in one-on-one violence, it is usually not involved in mass shootings, which usually require planning by a person who is not chemically impaired.

Paranoid public

Despite this evidence, the fear of people with mental illness persists.

A 1999 U.S. Surgeon General's report stated that 61 percent of Americans believed that people with schizophrenia were likely to be dangerous to others. A 1996 study reported that 38 percent of Americans were unwilling to be friends with someone with a mental illness, and 68 percent did not want someone with depression marrying into their families.

Stereotypes often are perpetuated by the media. The National Mental Health Association found that characters portrayed as being mentally ill were frequently depicted as being violent, and few stories focused on recovery.

Statements made by National Rifle Association Executive Vice President Wayne LaPierre calling people with mental illness "monsters" and "lunatics" further adds to the stigma, and could keep people from seeking treatment or helping those who need it, McBride said.

Allen Edlefson, chief executive officer of Riverwood Center, is concerned that the negative perceptions about mental illness will convince people that nothing can be done to combat it.

"Mental illness is treatable," Edlefson said. "It may take a few cycles, but it can be done."

Prevention pays

Edlefson is supportive of the call for mental health first aid training, something Riverwood as been offering the community.

While employers provide such training as CPR, statistics show that someone is more likely to encounter a co-worker experiencing depression than a heart attack.

The mental health first aid training provides information on how to recognize these problems, how to respond and where to refer someone for help.

While better educating the public on mental health issues would be a plus, there is a link in the safety net that has been weakened.

Funding cuts means those who recognize they have an illness have fewer places to turn, VanderWaal said.

Most funding for mental health treatment comes through Medicaid, and is directed at those with the most persistent and chronic mental illnesses. And even that money is being threatened.

In the past four years, 30 states have cut their funding for mental health treatment, VanderWaal said. "At that point, you're not taking out what people would consider fat, you're digging into the bone."

Schools have cut the number of psychologists and social workers, VanderWaal said.

The funding shortage is a decades-long trend that started when patient treatment shifted from state institutions to community mental health centers, McBride said. The problem was that the programs were not well-funded, and compliance with treatment was left to patients who were left on their own, he said.

As a result, many regressed and ended up homeless, and prisons and jails became the de facto treatment centers for mental illness and substance abuse, McBride said. "The only bond issues that pass are for prisons."

Having access to treatment can be critical, Edlefson said. There is a large no-show rate for those who have to wait longer than 14 days to enter treatment.

Lakeland Regional Medical Center has a unit for people with mental illness, but there is no residential treatment facility in Berrien County.

Obama's recommendations include completing requirements for private health insurance to cover mental health services, and making sure that Medicaid clients receive quality mental health coverage.

"The promise is there. There is hope on the horizon" that parity in mental health treatment will be achieved, VanderWaal said. "There is a feeling among those in the mental health field that we've crossed an important barrier. But the reality is not there yet."

Fighting a stereotype

Experts say there's no need to be paranoid about the mentally ill, who are more a danger to themselves than others

By JOHN MATUSZAK

Area experts are skeptical new mental health measures will reduce gun violence, though they welcome President Barack Obama’s proposals to prevent, detect and treat it.

The skepticism is rooted in the fact that the majority of violent crimes are not committed by people with a mental illness, including bipolar disorders, chronic depression and schizophrenia.

"It's important for the public to realize that mental illness does not equate to dangerous violence," said Deane McBride, chairman of the Department of Behavioral Sciences at Andrews University and chairman of the Berrien County Board of Health. The odds

Burnett agreed with his colleagues that violent crime is infrequently committed by the mentally ill. Only 3 to 5 percent of violent crimes are committed by those with a diagnosed mental illness.

The president's plan for improving mental health treatment

President Barack Obama has made the following recommendations to improve mental health services, as part of a package designed to reduce gun violence:

- Make sure 750,000 students and young adults get treatment for mental health problems. A new initiative, Project AWARE (Advancing Wellness and Resilience in Education), includes spending $15 million for mental health first aid training for teachers and other adults who interact with youth, and $40 million to help school districts work with law enforcement, mental health agencies and other organizations to make sure that young people are referred to the treatment they need.

- Ensure coverage of mental health treatment. The president has promised to finish requirements for private health insurance plans to cover mental health services. The administration will issue final regulations next month governing how existing group health plans that offer mental health services must cover them at parity under the Affordable Care Act.

- Act requires all new small group and individual plans to cover 10 essential health benefit categories, including mental health and substance abuse issues.

- Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius and U.S. Education Secretary Arne Duncan are to launch a national dialogue about mental illness. The administration vows to make sure millions of Americans covered by Medicaid get mental health coverage. Medicaid is already the biggest funder of mental health services, and the Affordable Care Act will extend Medicaid coverage to 17 million Americans. The administration is issuing a letter to state health officials making clear that their plans must comply with mental health parity requirements.

Cass man gets long prison term after 11th conviction for drunken driving

By DEBRA HAIGHT

NILES — A Cassopolis man is going to prison after his 11th drunken driving conviction.

Russell Paul Price, 47, pleaded guilty to third-offense drunken driving and was sentenced to 40 years in prison. He was given concurrent terms of 90 days for possession of marijuana and 180 days for driving with a suspended license.

Price was given credit for five days served already and must pay $2,475 in fines and costs. He said at the second time he has been sent to prison for drunken driving.

The latest incident occurred Dec. 3 at Walton Road and River Street in Buchanan.

"There's no question that you're an alcoholic and continue to abuse drugs," Berrien County Trial Court Judge Dennis Wiley said.

"Then you get behind the wheel of a car and endanger every other human being out there. This is your 11th conviction, one of these days you're going to kill someone else or yourself."

"The only thing I can do is take you out of the community as long as I can. Your blood-alcohol level was three times the legal limit plus whatever drugs you were on. You've left us no choice."

Wiley said he departed from the sentencing guidelines of seven to 23 months because they did not give sufficient weight to the number of prior convictions.

Assistant Prosecutor Kelly Travis said Price is "not probation or local jail
