Polymers, Water & Tofu

Ask Dr. Hayes, what's cooking and he'd say 'polymers, water and tofu.' Want to know what else is on the menu?

Attend our first Fall 2013 lecture in the Andrews University Chemistry & Biochemistry Departmental Seminar Series this coming Thursday, Sept. 5 at 4:30 p.m. As usual we meet in Halenz Hall, Room A-107.

A new feature of every seminar moving forward is a 2-3 minute 'curiosity question' period BEFORE each presentation is given. This is an opportunity for students to come to each seminar with questions. You just might be called upon. Come prepared.

Thursday's seminar topic is:
Branched Polymers, Bright Water, & Burnt Tofu

Our speaker is:
Ryan Hayes, Associate Professor, Department of Chemistry & Biochemistry

Teachers are encouraged to announce this lecture in their classes and/or forward this email to their classes.

For non-Andrews faculty and students wishing to see the talk in the Chemistry Amphitheater:

Once you get to Andrews University, turn in at the J. N. Andrews Blvd. entrance. Go pass the Security Gate House. Make right turn at the first intersection on to E Campus Circle Drive. Then make a left turn at the next intersection (E Campus Circle Drive). Make another left onto Administration Drive. The Science Complex is the bldg on your left. The Chemistry Dept. is on the side of the Science Complex (4270 Administration Drive) opposite the Bookstore parking lot. You can park in the bookstore parking lot or the one straight ahead. My Office # is A-127 Halenz Hall .... on the lower floor of the Science Complex.

Bible Journey Sabbath School Class

If you are a new faculty member or graduate student and have not yet found a Sabbath School class, we invite you to check out our Bible Journey SS class. This new class, which began in May 2013, meets in Nethery Hall, Room 143, each Sabbath at the regular Sabbath School class time: 10:30 to 11:30 a.m.

Our teachers are Stanley Patterson, Associate Professor of Christian Ministry; Paul Petersen, Professor of Hebrew Bible; and Woodrow Whidden, Professor of Religion, Emeritus. Seminary doctoral students Katrina Blue and Laura Morrow will teach occasionally as their study schedules permit.

Since its beginning, the class has been studying "lesser known Bible characters" and will continue to study those narratives through September. For the final quarter of the year, we will use the regular Adult Bible Study Guide, which will be on the topic of the sanctuary—a major biblical theme.

The second Sabbath of each month we have a time of fellowship—typically a potluck dinner or supper. We invite you to come and check out our class. You just might find a group of new friends.

Dr. Ryan Hayes spent nearly a decade working in industry before beginning his academic career at Andrews University. His experience includes business development, patent portfolio management, analytical chemistry and scaling up synthesis processes for a special type of nanopolymers called dendrimers. These dendrimers are being commercially developed for many products including life science reagents, personal care ingredients, agricultural chemicals, coating formulations, and polymer additives.

Hayes was Director of Business Development for 4.5 years with Dendritic Nanotechnologies (DNT) located in Mt. Pleasant, MI before accepting teaching responsibilities at Andrews University. Before DNT, he was employed as a research scientist at Lynntech, Inc. in College Station, TX. There he assisted with numerous projects to develop and commercialize innovative electrochemical and optical based chemical sensing technologies.

Hayes teaches General Chemistry as well as instructs all laboratory sections for this class. Dr. Hayes’ research interests center around analysis of dendrimers, optical sensors, and new sources of carcinogens. He is married to Suzi, a microbiologist, and they have three young children: Carter, Christiana, and Cadance.

New Astronomy Class This Fall

Date: August 23, 2013
Contact: physics@andrews.edu
Website: http://www.andrews.edu/physics
Phone: 269-471-3430

This semester Andrews University Department of Physics introduces Observational Astronomy, a one-credit evening laboratory class.

"The impetus behind the creation of this class was that there were often students who had taken a 3-credit science course for General Education credits, and were short a lab and an additional credit," explains Margarita Mattingly, chair of the Department of Physics. "This class offers both, as well as some incredible opportunities to observe our skies."

Geared to appeal to students with varied levels of experience and knowledge in astronomy, this class will teach participants how to set up and align a computer-controlled portable telescope as well as the observatory's 14-inch telescope, use a spectrometer, access online planetarium programs to view maps of the sky and locate objects of interest, and more.

"Students will plan observation sessions noting which celestial objects will be above the horizon during that session," explains Robert Kingman, professor of physics and instructor of this course. "We'll also have access to large international telescopes and observatories online."

Students will use the Andrews observatory, various telescopes, and high-power binoculars to view the following:

- Earth's moon
- Planets of our solar system
- Stars, star clusters, gaseous clouds, and exploded stars in the Milky Way galaxy
- Galaxies near the Milky Way galaxy

"This class will develop in participants a sense of the enormous size of our universe and increased appreciation for the beauty found in the heavens," says Kingman. "Studying and teaching astronomy has given me a greater understanding of God's love for each of us, and I hope to pass that understanding on to my students."

Observational Astronomy will meet every Wednesday evening from 6:30-9:30 p.m. For more information, contact the Department of Physics at 269-471-3430 or email physics@andrews.edu.
What goes on at Andrews University during the summer? In the Department of Physics, students and faculty create and construct a six-foot Tesla coil.

"In laymen's terms, a Tesla coil is a lightning generator," explains Brendan Cross, instructor of physics at Andrews. "In even simpler terms, it makes big sparks."

In more technical terms, a Tesla coil is a resonant transformer circuit used to produce high-voltage, low-current, high frequency alternating-current electricity. The device is named after Nikola Tesla, a Serbian inventor, engineer, and physicist who invented the coil around 1891.

Though the coil is being built in the department labs, it will, for obvious reasons, be moved outside to be used. Under Cross' careful supervision, three students have been involved with putting the coil together: physics majors Samantha Easton and Mateja Plantak, and engineering major Robert Polski.

And why are they building it?

"Why not?" replies Cross. "We're always looking for cool ways to demonstrate how science works. We already have a large parabolic mirror, a giant vortex cannon, a trebuchet and a quantum locking track; we go big here."

The department's coil will be six feet tall when finished, and will emit sparks within around a 26-foot diameter. It will be used for class demonstrations and an aid to learning for both college and on-campus high school students.

While there is some danger of damage or injury, Cross and the students are taking no chances and safety procedures are in place for when the coil is in use. They intend to build a Faraday cage to complement the Tesla coil once it is completed.

Named for English scientist Michael Faraday, a Faraday cage is an enclosure that blocks external electric fields. It works by using an external static electrical field that causes the electric charges within the cage's conducting material to be distributed such that they cancel the field's effect in the cage's interior. Faraday cages are often used to protect electronic equipment from lightning strikes and electrostatic discharges.

"We do have a lot of fun toys in this department," says Magarita Mattingly, department chair, "and we need them so students can go hands-on and figure out and understand how things work. And the toys we have always change because once we figure it all out we move on to the next fun thing. Whoever said learning can't be fun?"

Cross and the students plan to have the coil completed by mid-November; any public opportunity to watch the device in action will be announced as information becomes available.

AICER Symposium
AICER is inviting students and faculty to attend Dr. Christon Arthur’s presentation on September 3, 2013 at 5:30pm in Buller Hall, Student Lounge. Dr. Arthur serves as the Associate Provost for Faculty Development and Dean of the School of Graduate Studies and Research.

His presentation is entitled, "Graduate Students’ Advocacy," and the abstract follows:

Advocacy may be defined as the act or process of supporting or promoting a cause. Therefore, in the context of graduate education, advocacy may be defined as the act of supporting or promoting the cause of graduate students. In its truest form, graduate education is a collaborative experience between a student and the faculty. By its very nature, this collaborative experience creates a power differential between student and faculty – the faculty is powerful and the graduate student is powerless. The faculty is the expert and the graduate student is the novice. The faculty has the institutional culture on their side; the student has to learn that culture. How does a graduate student navigate this landscape? Is advocacy a legitimate expectation of the graduate student? Who is responsible for advocating for graduate students? Where do graduate students go for conflict resolution? This AICER Symposium attempts to address these pressing issues. Participants are encouraged to bring real-life challenges faced by graduate students to the discussion.

Online participants need to login as 'Guest' at https://andrews.adobeconnect.com/_a877709416/research/ or http://www.andrews.edu/sed/aicer/researchwebinars/ whether or not they are registered Andrews students.
