Youth Missions Honduras
Youth Missions Honduras
This Thursday a team of about 20 students will leave for Honduras for an ongoing mission partnership with the Hogar de Ninos (Children's Home) operated by REACH International. The main focus of the mission team will be to conduct a day camp for about 150 children from the Hogar and the surrounding communities. This includes some of the poorest children. Due to rising luggage fees, we're no longer taking much baggage, but we are taking funds to purchase clothing and food there. Your daily prayer support is vital to this outreach ministry. Donations can be made through Pioneer Memorial Church and should be marked "PMC Youth Missions Honduras". For more information contact Glenn Russell (glenn@andrews.edu).

Film Class Attends Film Festival

As part of his "Directing the Documentary" class at Andrews University, Paul Kim, associate professor of Documentary Film, debuted a program to take his students to the Toronto International Film Festival this past summer and is considering opening up this opportunity to the entire Documentary Film program.

The Toronto International Film Festival is one of the two most prominent film festivals in the world, the other being the Cannes Film Festival in France. Because of worldwide exposure of the Toronto festival, Kim feels that this opportunity is important to get his students involved with film in a big urban area.

Student Writes on Learning from Holidays

Katelyn Ruiz, communications graduate student, writes for U.S. News & World Report

As an international student, I miss my folks, but being away from home over the holidays makes the distance between us seem much greater.

To combat this calendar-induced bout of seasonal homesickness, I committed to celebrating in my own way with whatever traditions I could sneak across the border.

First, I realized that I was not alone in feeling lonely. Many of my fellow international students, whom I came to know through classes or campus-sponsored activities, also missed their own holiday celebrations.

Professor Speaks on Retention in the Church

Spectrum Magazine

With one third of baptized Seventh-day Adventist church members slipping out the back door, officials at the General Conference have decided it is time to address the issue in a major way. To do so, academic researchers and church administrators are meeting this week in Silver Spring to discuss the data and suggest a strategy to reverse the trend during the “Summit on Nurture and Retention, 2013: Discipling, Retaining, and Reclaiming.” ... Andrews University Professor David Sedlacek provided the literature review of why Christians leave the Church, particularly young people.

News Story Helps Student Find Family in Philippines

Typhoon Haiyan ravaged the Philippines last Friday, and many people are still trying to find out if their loved ones are alive. After a week of searching Rebecca Nicolas found out her family is okay.

Nicolas is a student at Andrews University and she has been waiting to hear from her family for over a week.

Read the full story
Back home in Canada, every relative within a three-hour drive would annually commute to my family’s home for holiday dinners. Celebrating Thanksgiving and Christmas were two of our favorite excuses to overeat, share stories and be active together. As an international student, I miss my folks, but being away from home over the holidays makes the distance between us seem much greater.

To combat this calendar-induced bout of seasonal homesickness, I committed to celebrating in my own way with whatever traditions I could sneak across the border.

First, I realized that I was not alone in feeling lonely. Many of my fellow international students, whom I came to know through classes or campus-sponsored activities, also missed their own holiday celebrations.

Second, I remembered that the point of having free days out of classes and away from deadlines is for students to rest and prepare themselves for the big push toward finals.

Third, I researched the different ways people might observe and celebrate the upcoming holidays and finally, I recognized that for domestic students, meeting me is an international experience.

These ideas accumulated around the second weekend in October, where students at my university got a short fall break for Columbus Day. For me, that was Canadian Thanksgiving.

I phoned home, found out what was on the menu and who had RSVP'd, and then spent the rest of the weekend sulking because I wouldn't get to be there.

When I was an undergrad in Canada, I had many international friends who had traveled there to study. On my own turf, it was easier for me to adjust and accommodate their holiday homesickness. But now I see what they must have been going through, and I know that it is always easier to handle the holidays together.

One of my favorite Thanksgiving celebrations involved a potluck-style table filled with every ethnic food I could think of. In place of the traditional North American mashed potatoes, we had Ukrainian pierogies. Rather than sweet potatoes or baked yams, we ate Filipino pancit.

Instead of finishing with pumpkin pie, we started with an Australian recipe for pumpkin soup. Indian red lentil dhal with naan rounded out our entrees, while on the side we welcomed a spicy Ghanaian salsa-type relish made with peppers that had to be handled with gloves. For dessert, we made fairy toast: a British comfort food of buttered bread and candy sprinkles.

It was great to sample dishes from every corner of the world, but more than the eating, there was the laughter.

One of our multicultural guests started chewing her corn on the cob through the husk and was relieved to hear she didn't have to pretend to think it was tasty. Another tried mixing cranberry sauce with the Ghanaian peppers, but the flavors just didn't fit. The people, however, did.

We became our own little family for that meal. We didn't all celebrate Thanksgiving in the places where we were raised, but we all shared the common tradition of eating with those we cared for, of common meals and memories.

The beauty of the international calendar here is that I get a second chance at doing dinner right. This year in the States, I can partake in the traditional Thanksgiving. I'll probably bring some cornbread to celebrate harvest, and talk about Martin Frobisher’s third voyage through Canada’s Northwest Passage when my friends from the U.S. bring up pilgrims and the Mayflower.
We'll all watch football with a lemon-shaped pigskin, and then maybe accommodate our Brazilian buddies by putting on another football game where the round ball is black and white.

Then we can light Chinese lanterns and float them over Lake Michigan, and maybe make some music with an Irish penny flute and Austrian violin.

Whatever we do to celebrate this November as the semester winds down, it will be as a community, because each holiday can be shared and enjoyed wherever you are and wherever you come from.

Live-In Men's Dean Needed

We need a live in dean for our 6 adult men. He would need to get them up in the morning, have morning and evening worship with them, check to make sure their rooms are clean, have them load their laundry, but turn the washer and dryer on for them (they are not allowed to add the detergent, the dean does that), client supervision. The present dean also gets their breakfast and supper. With more help, that could change.

The pay is $300 per month.
