24-Hour Donor Challenge This Thursday!

Got a minute?

Help Andrews University make every moment count on Thursday, April 24, 2014!

The Challenge:

Get 500 people to give back in 24 hours to secure a $10,000 challenge gift! (Two anonymous alumni have each pledged $5,000 if we can reach our goal of 500 donors in 24 hours.) To count, gifts must be made on April 24, 2014. Alumni, parents, friends, faculty/staff, and even current students can all help make a difference during this challenge!

How to Give:

You can give online by clicking here or call the Office of Development at 269.471.3124!

Why Participation Matters:

Donations given during this challenge help our current and future students! Any donation given online or by phone to Andrews University on April 24 counts toward this goal, but gifts to The Fund for Andrews are especially beneficial! A facilitated Andrews University conversation with LGBT students that is focused on bridge building, listening, understanding and caring in a context that affirms the Church and its standards. Curtis VanderWaal, chair and professor of social work at Andrews University, and Nancy Carbonell, associate professor, Graduate Psychology & Counseling, will moderate this afternoon program.

It's important to note that while this is not an event about advocacy or proposed changes to our church's policy, it is one that is designed to be a supportive environment where Andrews University LGBT students can honestly and safely share their stories. Those of us who are not LGBT will have an opportunity to listen and learn from these students about their journeys.

Presentations on LGBT Issues

Andrews Joins Adventist Church in its Ongoing Study of LGBT Issues & Lives

This month Andrews University will take the opportunity, in a variety of settings, to reflect on and seek to better understand the issues surrounding the lives of LGBT individuals within our University community, within the church and throughout the world at large.

Recently, this conversation and search for understanding within our Seventh-day Adventist Church community centered on a March 2014 summit in Cape Town, South Africa, coordinated by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists.

As Andrews University reflects on the Cape Town summit on LGBT issues, and the University's own participation in and exploration of these issues in this variety of settings, President Niels-Erik Andreasen says, "In each of these significant conversations about these critical issues, and in those that will continue, throughout the world, our Church and this campus, it's important that we seek to offer compassion and support for all members of our community. That process best begins with listening and understanding each other. I invite you to become a meaningful participant in this journey."

The Cape Town summit, "In God's Image: Scripture. Sexuality. Society.,” was attended by nearly 350 pastors, educators, behavioral scientists, theologians, church leaders and others. Among those attendees were five Andrews University representatives: Nicholas Miller, Roy Gane, Miroslav Kiš and Peter Swanson from the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary, and Steve Yeagley from the Division of Student Life.

In the context of this now global conversation, it's important that Andrews University, as the flagship university of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, and especially as a community of faith and learning, also takes the opportunity for reflection that is marked by study, prayer, and direct and honest communication.

That has already begun in a variety of ways, and with a common understanding that these are each opportunities for information, bridge building, caring and support—all within the context of Andrews University's support for the Seventh-day Adventist Church and its standards.

A short while ago, Nicholas Miller, one of the presenters at that Cape Town Summit, gave a report on the issues and discussions at Pioneer Memorial Church Sabbath School.

The discussion continued with the April 9 Student Movement, where our students, along with some faculty and staff, wrote articles and editorials that seek to better understand those with an LGBT orientation and the need for caring and support.

Finally, on the last two Saturdays of the month, there will be two public meetings that will explore LGBT issues in the context of the Seventh-day Adventist church and its standards, and in the context of the lives of those who face these issues.

First, on Saturday, April 19, our Student Life team is coordinating an event, facilitated by two of our faculty, which welcomes our students and community into a supportive environment where LGBT students can share their stories.

Then, on Saturday, April 26, all five of the Andrews representatives who attended the Cape Town summit will offer a panel presentation to discuss its impact on our church and the Andrews University community.

Details of those two presentations can be found below.

The Passion of Christ According to Matthew
by Becky St. Clair

On April 18 and 19 at 7 p.m., the Andrews University Department of Music presents a special Easter production, "The Passion According to Matthew" in the Howard Performing Arts Center. The event is free and open to the public, with donations welcome to assist in deferring costs of the production.

This musical play set to the music of Johann Sebastian Bach tells the story of the death and resurrection of Christ, straight from the Gospel of Matthew.

"The story portrayed is essentially verbatim from the Bible," explains Charles Reid, associate professor of voice and producer of the performance. He also explains that intermingled with the story are lots of meditation points; opportunities to dwell on the story in a personal way before moving on.

"The idea of 'stations of the cross' is common in many other denominations, where participants take time to really think about different parts of the story of Christ's death and resurrection and what they mean," says Reid. "This is what the Andrews University annual Passion Play has strived to create as well. You get not only into what happens to Jesus, but how everything relates to the other characters in the story. It's truly eye-opening."

Reid explains that the biggest character in the production is the University Singers, as they really do the storytelling alongside the narrator, also called the evangelist. David Ortiz, sophomore music major, will play the role of evangelist. Deneile Clark, a student in the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary on the Art Student Featured in Local Exhibition

By Eloise Ravell

Lynda Lee, Andrews University undergraduate student studying visual arts and chemistry, was recently accepted into the Michigan Emerging Graduate Artist (MEGA) Juried Exhibition hosted by the Master of Fine Arts (MFA) Collective of Kendall College of Art and Design at the Urban Institute for Contemporary Arts in Grand Rapids for two of her oil paintings completed this year. Lee was also one of three recipients of the Juror's Choice award.

The exhibition showcases 21 regional artists who will display their work in media such as drawing, painting, printmaking, photography, sculpture and mixed media. It also allows newly working artists to expand their professional network in their field of interest.

The MEGA exhibition allows Lee and other artists to be officially introduced to the artist community and connect with professionals in the region. Networking is vital in an art career and is a means of building relationships with fellow artists and potential customers. It also is a way of obtaining information about gallery showings and creating a following of supporters.

"As a student, Lynda works incredibly hard and has pushed herself during the past two years that I have had her as a student," says Kari Friestad, assistant professor of painting and drawing, whose work is also featured in the exhibition. "By participating in this state-wide show and being selected as a Juror's choice from among BFA and MFA candidates, it has shown that Lynda's work is at a high level of creative accomplishment."

Lee, who plans to travel to South Korea upon graduation to teach English and give Bible studies, plans to attend Loma Linda University this coming fall to study dentistry. She is currently in her fifth and final year at Andrews. Lee submitted two paintings that she had been working on for her Honors Thesis Project, a yearlong project that seniors in the J.N. Andrews Honors Program must complete as part of their Honors requirements.

"The two paintings that I submitted for the exhibition are part of a series of male portraits that attempt to explore the concept of connection and disconnection between the self and other identities," explains Lee. "I am working with the idea that our identity is the result of being both separate and related to the other, which requires some degree of openness and vulnerability. Being vulnerable can often be a challenge and has always been and still is a personal struggle for me. I wanted there to be a lack of intimacy and tried to portray the individuals in my paintings as being withdrawn and introverted by averting their gazes as well as giving them a more contemplative and meditative mood."

Lee was inspired by Dutch-born sculptor Hanneke Beaumont who creates pieces in which human figures seem to be neither male nor female in appearance and neither young nor old. The ambiguous nature of Beaumont's figures represents universal ideas of how people relate to each other. The sculptor also works with the idea of separation and often creates groups of figures that are close enough to interact with each other, yet remain separate and withdrawn.

"I tried watercolor and a bit of acrylic painting in some of my art classes in high school, but I didn't start working with oil paint until I took an intro painting class here at Andrews," says Lee.

Her time at Andrews has enriched her experience as a painter and the MEGA exhibition has helped her campus of Andrews University, plays the role of Jesus.

Something Reid and his cast and crew paid special attention to was allowing the audience to connect with the characters and, as a result, the story.

"We're taking a lot of care to make the text into modern English so the audience doesn't have to translate from King James English," he says. "Instead of looking at the story of something that happened over 2,000 years ago, we're looking at a story that's relevant for now and we want everyone to look at it like it's their story."

"The Passion According to Matthew" is a completely student-run production. While Reid has served as director and producer, the costuming, lighting, staging and all other details have been student-led.

"I'm really excited about this project," says Reid. "Wherever possible we're using students. This is the purpose of a university environment—to give the students these opportunities for growth."

A joint venture between the vocal/choral and symphonic areas, "The Passion" is a major department production involving many areas. After last year's successful production of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," the department was encouraged to do another large performance involving multiple ensembles and soloists. Stephen Zork, associate professor of music for choir and voice, is conducting the choir; while Claudio Gonzalez, associate professor of music for orchestra and strings, is managing the instrumental aspect for the production.

Reid was inspired by "The Passion" early in his career when he was in the choir at Brooklyn Academy of Music. Director Jonathan Miller chose to perform this piece in a unique way, similar to how Reid is doing it this time.

"Out of the hundreds of performances I've done over the years, that set of performances remains an emotional high point," Reid recalls. "I've never seen audiences so impacted in random ways. People realized things they weren't used to noticing and were open to the story in a fresh way. That's what I hope to accomplish here as well."

Reid continues, "When you look at this story, little by little you see Jesus was very emotional. He actually got angry, afraid, frustrated, even angsty. Not things we usually associate with Jesus. So a piece like this, done how we're doing it in a more contemporary setting, can have a strong impact on anyone, Christian or not."
become more confident in her artistic abilities.

"Andrews is not a large school, and there are only a handful of fine art students," says Lee. "But I want to believe that this exhibition shows that if you're focused, motivated and diligent in your work, you will get better at what you're doing and be acknowledged."

Lee feels blessed to have been featured in the exhibition and is grateful to be introduced into the artist community.

"Lynda is seriously committed to her work and a very gifted artist," says Friestad. "It has been a wonderful experience having her as a student. I am excited to see what other opportunities might come her way as a result of her hard work."

Felipe Tan, senior cataloger at the Andrews University James White Library, visited Middle East University in Beirut, Lebanon, earlier in March to host a workshop for the personnel of the George Arthur Keough Library. "The overall goal was to help the MEU personnel re-catalog the growing collection of Islamic, Arabic and theology collections of the library," explains Tan. "I provided them with the know-how and tools to accomplish this task."

The Dewey Decimal Classification is a commonly used scheme that, according to Larry Lichtenwalter, dean of the faculty of philosophy and theology at MEU, "scatters books under broad headings." The Library of Congress Classification, however, has been designed for academic and research collections in specialized disciplines. It is used by most academic libraries in the United States and in several other countries. Lichtenwalter hinted at his own partiality towards the newly implemented system, emphasizing that it will make all of the holdings within his department easier to find.

Tan carefully initiated the re-cataloging process at the MEU Library. According to Lichtenwalter, he wanted Tan to reorganize the library collection to foster a more effective research environment for graduate and undergraduate students in anticipation of more cooperative programs with Andrews.

"Because of our close collaboration with Andrews University, especially in the School of Theology, it was advised that we transform our collection," asserted Farid Khoury, head librarian, who also noted that the Library of Congress Classification is used by most American academic libraries. "Therefore," continued Khoury, "in our last academic resource committee, we made the decision to start this process with the collection of the Faculty of Philosophy and Theology and the Institute of Arabic and Islamic Studies."

Khoury additionally emphasized that this transition will serve as a "pilot step after which the overall process will be revisited and evaluated" and that the entire library would not be converted until the staff had experienced and evaluated the changes brought about by the switch firsthand.

"A decision will later be made as to whether we will use both the Dewey Decimal System and the LC Classification System for our library or if everything will be transformed into the latter scheme."

Lyndi Khalil, assistant librarian, also participated in the workshop.

"Felipe was very professional and knowledgeable and helped us to consider things we didn't realize needed to be considered," says Khalil. "He would love to come back and visit our library and told us that he's always available for email consultation should any future dilemmas occur."

MEU is constantly seeking for innovative ways in which their facilities and infrastructure can be positively altered, however, the re-cataloging of the library archives of an entire faculty is exceptionally noteworthy because it would make MEU's George Arthur Keough Library the first academic library in Lebanon to utilize the precise Library of Congress Classification System.

"I found the MEU library personnel intelligent and eager to learn," says Tan. "I enjoyed the exposure to the culture of the Middle East and learned a lot from mingling with the people. The Lebanese are friendly, approachable and eager to learn and move forward. I was glad for the opportunity to help Middle East University."

Professor Quoted in Article
A couple articles ago I started a look at some popular food myths that have no real scientific merit. I love these things as they help people make better, more informed choices about food without being mislead by popular hearsay. Here are a few more food myths for you to ponder:

Your body can’t use the protein from beans unless you eat them with rice.

This is a myth that I once believed in as it pertained to how we would design complementary ingredients when creating new dishes. Now we know better. Proteins - which our bodies need to make everything from new muscle to hormones - are made up of different combinations of 20 amino acids. Thing is, our bodies can make only 11 of these amino acids; we must get the other nine from food. Animal-based protein-rich foods like eggs and meat provide all nine of these “essential” amino acids, but nearly all plant foods are low in at least one. Experts used to say that to get what your body needs to make proteins, you needed to pair plant-based foods with complementary sets of amino acids - like rice and beans. Now they know that you don’t have to eat those foods at the same meal. “If you get a variety of foods throughout the day, they all go into the ‘basket’ of amino acids that are available for the body to use,” says Winston J. Craig, Ph.D., R.D., nutrition department chair at Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Michigan.

Busting food myths...Part II

By Chef Tim Tibbitts

A couple articles ago I started a look at some popular food myths that have no real scientific merit. I love these things as they help people make better, more informed choices about food without being mislead by popular hearsay. Here are a few more food myths for you to ponder:

Your body can't use the protein from beans unless you eat them with rice.

This is a myth that I once believed in as it pertained to how we would design complementary ingredients when creating new dishes. Now we know better. Proteins - which our bodies need to make everything from new muscle to hormones - are made up of different combinations of 20 amino acids. Thing is, our bodies can make only 11 of these amino acids; we must get the other nine from food. Animal-based protein-rich foods like eggs and meat provide all nine of these "essential" amino acids, but nearly all plant foods are low in at least one. Experts used to say that to get what your body needs to make proteins, you needed to pair plant-based foods with complementary sets of amino acids - like rice and beans. Now they know that you don't have to eat those foods at the same meal. "If you get a variety of foods throughout the day, they all go into the 'basket' of amino acids that are available for the body to use," says Winston J. Craig, Ph.D., R.D., nutrition department chair at Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Michigan.

Calories eaten at night are more fattening than those eaten early in the day.

Dr. John Foreyt: "Calories are calories are calories, and it doesn't matter what time you eat them. What matters are the total calories you take in vs the total amount you burn." John Foreyt, Ph.D., is the director of the Behavioral Medicine Research Center at Baylor College of Medicine. I think this one is simple common sense, but apparently common sense isn't so common.

"I have a weight problem because I eat foods like wheat or dairy that my body can't process."

This theory is, in fact, "illogical," says Marc Riedl, M.D., assistant professor of clinical immunology and allergy at UCLA. The inability to "process" foods, he notes, "would mean the foods are not metabolized and calories would not be absorbed." This would lead to weight loss, not gain, he notes.

"This is an example of how the term 'food allergy' has become misused and distorted to be associated with anything unpleasant surrounding eating," says Riedl. "There is no scientific evidence that a food allergy causes weight gain." Of course, cutting out whole categories of foods will probably help you lose weight, simply because it takes so many choices off the table. Again with the common sense.

Radiation from microwaves creates dangerous compounds in your food.

"Radiation" might connote images of nuclear plants, but it simply refers to energy that travels in waves and spreads out as it goes. Microwaves, radio waves and the energy waves that we perceive as visual light all are forms of radiation. So, too, are X-rays and gamma rays—which do pose health concerns. But the microwaves used to cook foods are many, many times weaker than X-rays and gamma rays, says Robert Brackett, Ph.D., director of the National Center for Food Safety and Technology at the Illinois Institute of Technology. And the types of changes that occur in microwaved food as it cooks are “from heat generated inside the food, not the microwaves themselves,” says Brackett. "Microwave cooking is really no different from any other cooking method that applies heat to food." That said, microwaving in some plastics may leach compounds into your food, so take care to use only microwave-safe containers.

Microwaving zaps nutrients.

This is misguided thinking, says Carol Byrd-Bredbenner, Ph.D., R.D., professor of nutrition at Rutgers University in New Brunswick,
New Jersey. Whether you’re using a microwave, a charcoal grill or a solar-heated stove, “it’s the heat and the amount of time you’re cooking that affect nutrient losses, not the cooking method,” she says. “The longer and hotter you cook a food, the more you’ll lose certain heat- and water-sensitive nutrients, especially vitamin C and thiamin (a B vitamin).” Because microwave cooking often cooks foods more quickly, it can actually help to minimize nutrient losses.

I personally think microwaves get a bad reputation. They are very handy cooking utensils when used for purposes they are good at. Don’t try to cook a nice piece of meat in one as the lack of the Maillard Reaction will mean a sever lack of flavor, extraction of moisture leaving it tough and rubbery and a general lack of colour leaving the food beige looking. Very unappetizing.

You crave certain foods because you’re deficient in one of the nutrients they provide.

Nope - unless you’re a deer or moose. (In the spring, those animals are attracted to “salt licks”—mineral deposits that supply nutrients they need.) Human food cravings tend to be more about satisfying emotional needs, says Marcia Pelchat, Ph.D., a researcher at the Monell Chemical Senses Center in Philadelphia. “Cravings tend to occur when your diet is restricted or boring, or when you know that you can’t have something,” says Pelchat. “If it’s forbidden, you usually want it more.”

There is one nutrient deficiency that’s clearly associated with cravings in humans: iron. But instead of longing for iron-rich liver or steak, people severely deficient in iron stores tend to crave things like ice cubes, clay or even cement. Researchers don’t know what causes this strange, rare condition, called “pica,” but some suspect that a lack of iron might somehow affect the body’s appetite mechanisms.

It’s important to fast periodically, to cleanse toxins from your body.

Another of my favourites. I’ve seen friends of mine have serious health problems and even require surgery due to too much juicing and fasting. This is a big problem in today’s world.

The truth: Your body has its own elegantly designed system for removing toxins - namely, the liver, kidneys and spleen. There isn’t any evidence that not eating - or consuming only juice - for any period of time makes them do this job any better. Source: Keith-Thomas Ayoob, Ed.D., R.D., of Albert Einstein College of Medicine

Hopefully I have shed some light on some things you may have been misled on. I always hope to enlighten people and help to educate them about diet and food choices. If I can make one person healthier and still feel happy about what they eat, then my work has been a success. And that is some food for thought!

Horses for Sale!

I have two horses for sale. Our property cannot support the amount of horses currently living on it, therefore these horses need to go to good homes where they can get the attention and care they deserve.

The first horse is Amigo, a 6-year-old bay gelding. He is an unregistered Grade horse and is about 15 hands tall. Amigo is honestly the friendliest horse I’ve ever met. He is green-broke for riding and needs someone to continue his training. He would make a great riding horse. Asking $500.

The second horse is Sassy, a 16-year-old chestnut mare. She is an unregistered Belgian/Quarter Horse cross and is about 15.3 hands tall. Not much is known about her past riding history, but she is a very sweet horse on the ground and is very level-headed. She was ridden once while with us and was calm about the new experience. Would make a good companion or possible riding horse. Asking $200.
