The Neurobiology of Drug Addiction

Carrie Ferrario, received her Ph.D. in Neuroscience from the University of Michigan in 2006 and conducted postdoctoral research at Rosalind Franklin University of Medicine and Science. Throughout her career Dr. Ferrario has studied how experience alters brain function to promote compulsive drug-seeking and drug-taking behavior.

Ferrario has over 19 research publications in journals such as PLOS One, Analytical Chemistry, Journal of Neurochemistry, Brain Research and Pharmacology, Biochemistry and Behavior. Her current funding and awards include: NARSAD Young Investigator Award 2014, Kavli Fellow 2014, American College of Neuropsychopharmacology Travel Award 2013, and the Outstanding Mentor Award 2012.

Her research seeks to understand the neurobiological mechanisms that contribute to drug addiction and obesity. To accomplish this, her group employs a variety of approaches including: behavioral pharmacology, biochemistry, and slice electrophysiology after in vivo manipulations.

ANDREWS UNIVERSITY CHEMISTRY & BIOCHEMISTRY
HALENZ HALL AMPHITHEATER (Thursday, February 12, 4:30 pm)
Leadership Partners in Brazil

by Jenna Neil

In January, 50 participants from the South American Division attended an intensive session of the MA in Leadership program in Brazil. This program is a partnership between Andrews University and Brazil Adventist University.

"A request came from the South American Division president, " said Robson Marinho, chair of the Department of Leadership. "It looks like there is a trend in the church to provide leadership training for the administration and they wanted to provide this for their own administration. We prepared the program and hired the faculty."

Conversations began in 2008 and the first cohort was held in 2010. Faculty from Andrews University go there twice a year in January and July, and there are also local faculty who advise the students.

"The program is job-embedded, which means the participants are required and expected to have a professional career," explains Marinho. "The program is competency based instead of course driven and the participants demonstrate their competencies in their professional careers. Ideally, the program is open to the community and a majority of the participants are sponsored."

Each cohort lasts for two and a half years with five intensive sessions and the current cohort is the third. Four out of the five sessions take place in Brazil while the fifth takes place at the Berrien Springs campus of Andrews University. The Brazil program follows the same structure as the Andrews Department of Leadership program.

During the semester, participants work with regional groups on projects, working with their advisors and meeting with learning groups.

"We try to keep it a smaller program," says Marinho. "So far, because of finances, we have agreed that 50 is a good size for a cohort. Though we admit a couple more than that, a few end up dropping out and we end up with 50."

"Because my first language is Portuguese, I was selected for this role before becoming the department chair," he explains. "I negotiated the partnership and am the current coordinator for the program. When I became the department chair my involvement became even stronger."

The program incorporates theories with experience, following David Kolb's theory of experiential learning. This theory says that you reflect on your past experience, conceptualize what it means for you and your life, and move into active experimentation based on that experience.

"The participants in our program are leaders at work, either as CEOs or middle managers of church organizations like conference presidents, treasurers and department directors," says Marinho. "Reflection is the key and not memorization. To be a successful leader they must reflect on what they are doing and why."

John Cosgrove attended the session in Brazil to lead out in a roundtable workshop with the theme of leadership and values. Cosgrove is a PhD student in the leadership program at Andrews, as well as a leadership consultant, and has been the president of several different companies. The roundtable began with Cosgrove speaking during the morning and leading discussions in the afternoon.

The leadership program has an annual roundtable conference at which guest speakers discuss current topics in leadership. Roundtable conferences follow the pattern of having a keynote speaker in the morning and small group discussions, typically about a book, in the afternoon facilitated by a faculty member.

"In their small groups the participants discussed what their values are," says Marinho. "They discussed how, as a leader and as a person, they can maximize leadership with values, not only for the sake of leadership but leadership based on values. It was a great presentation and we had a great time."

Marinho began working with the cohort at its founding and is now working to ensure the partnership continues to function.

"We strongly believe," said Marinho, "that leadership only develops with reflection and building bridges between theory and practice. We're not here to teach them how to be leaders; rather we're here to develop the leadership qualities they already have and therefore strengthen that leadership role."
For more information about the leadership programs available through Andrews University, visit andrews.edu/sed/leadership_dept.

Andrews Celebrates Black History Month
Note: Please accept our apologies for the errors in the initial release about this important celebration on our campus. We wish to affirm the significance of the Black community’s contribution to Andrews University and the nation as a whole.

The formal celebration of Black history in the United States was inaugurated by the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History (ASNLH) in 1926. Led by Carter G. Woodson, a Harvard-trained historian, the ASNLH hoped to raise awareness of African-American achievements in North America while highlighting the collective history of the worldwide African diaspora. Fifty years later, in 1976, President Gerald Ford called for the national observance of the holiday stating, “[we must] seize the opportunity to honor the often neglected accomplishments of Black Americans in every area of endeavor throughout our history.”

Andrews University student Jannel Monroe says, “Black History Month at Andrews University seeks to affirm this history by providing our students, staff, faculty, and public with multiple opportunities to reflect upon and internalize the rich history of the Pan-African movement.”

Black History Sabbath will be celebrated on Saturday, Feb. 7, at Pioneer Memorial Church. The guest speaker is Michael B. Kelly II, senior pastor of the Mt. Rubidoux Adventist Church in Riverside, California. Kelly received his MDiv from Andrews University in 2003. Pastor Kelly has had the honor of traveling the globe... preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Kelly has been honored with various awards throughout his pastoral ministry, including the Martin Luther King Jr. Trail Blazer Award for spiritual leadership and community service. Kelly believes in a focused yet multi-dimensional ministry. Because of this he has sought other avenues by which to bring the Kingdom to the community. One such way is through leadership training and team building for churches and businesses.
He is a certified trainer for the company Vital Smarts, and has shared presentations with communities, traveling to Adventist Conferences, the North American Division, local churches, as well as business and various companies throughout the United States.

As part of this month-long celebration, Andrews University will also be screening two notable films. The first is a PBS documentary titled "The African Americans: Many Rivers to Cross with Henry Louis Gates Jr." (pbs.org/wnet/african-americans-many-rivers-to-cross). The documentary covers the transition of African-Americans between Africa and America. Events covering five centuries, key sites and historians are integrated throughout the film.

The second film, Oscar-nominated "Selma," is the story of Martin Luther King Jr.’s march to secure equal voting rights from Selma, Alabama to Montgomery, Alabama. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 had already made desegregation legal but discrimination was still extensive. King led a march that culminated, less than five months later, in President Lyndon Johnson signing the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

All events are free and open to the public.

Driving Force Behind Andrews Study Bible Dies
Erno Gyeresi, a Romanian pastor-turned-business executive who became a key force behind the popular Andrews Study Bible, has died after a long struggle with cancer. He was 54.

Gyeresi died peacefully on Sabbath afternoon, Jan. 31, at his home in Niles, Michigan, with his family by his side, his family said.

Gyeresi spent the first 13 years of his career working as a pastor and church administrator in Romania, and the last 13 years of his life working at Andrews University Press, where he served as managing editor of the Andrews Study Bible, first released in the New King James Version in 2010.

The Music Moves Him
David Phelps believes in the power of song.

The Christian musician, best known as tenor in the Gaither Vocal Band and for his three-octave vocal range, says whether he's singing as part of Bill Gaither's legendary gospel group or as a solo artist, his goal is always the same.

"Music really is a vehicle for emotion," Phelps says by telephone from his farm in Culleoka, Tenn., just outside of Nashville. "If a song can move me in some way then in turn I can figure out how to interpret that so I can then go out on a nightly basis and look people in the face and hopefully sing it in a way that's moving to them. To me that's what it's all about."

Tonight, Phelps will be trying to move the audience at Andrews University’s Howard Performing Arts Center in a solo tour stop touting the songs off his latest album, 2012’s "Classic," as well as a few new tunes from his forthcoming record, "Freedom," which is due out in April.

Scott Moncrieff's Father Died
Robert E. Moncrieff, father of Scott Moncrieff, professor of English, passed away last week in Loma Linda, California. He was born in China in 1926 where he lived for the first 13 years of his life. He attended Andrews Academy after returning from China, and served in the army in WWII, mainly stationed on Guam in the South Pacific.

Returning after the war, Robert completed a business degree at La Sierra and married. He later went back to school and received a medical technologist degree, worked in a lab and decided to go to medical school. He graduated from Loma Linda with his MD in 1967, specializing in pathology and blood banking, and worked at Loma Linda University for many years as the chief medical consultant for the blood bank, giving occasional lectures to med tech and medical students.

For over twenty years Robert had Parkinson’s disease, and his quality of life was severely diminished for the last three quarters of that time. He was a kind, patient, generous and attentive father, and though not a great reader outside of medical books, US News and World Report and Time Magazine, Robert loved words and helped stimulate his son's interest in them.

The memorial service is scheduled to be held at the Brian S. Bull Pathology Building in Redlands, CA on Saturday, February 7, 2015 at 3:30 p.m.

Thank you for keeping the Moncrieff family in your prayers as they say goodbye to a beloved father.
