ADVENTIST PROGRAMMES TO AIR ON SKY TV [Richard de Lisser]

An initiative by the South England Conference Media Centre means that two Adventist programmes will air on Revelation TV, Monday and Thursday evenings starting next week. While Adventist guests have frequently appeared on Revelation TV over the past several years, and while in the past the channel has hosted a London-based evangelistic series with Pastor Walter Pearson, this will be the first time that specially commissioned programmes have been produced for the channel.

'Focus on the Future', the first of the two series will start to air on Monday 4 July at 8:30 pm. Hosted by SEC Communication director, Dr Richard de Lisser, the programme features interviews with Adventists guests who deal with issues in their lives and in the public domain. The first programme looks at 'Helping those in need'.

'Dark Room', airing on Thursday evenings at 8:30 pm aims at a different audience. In essence, this programme is a media review hosted by Pastor Sam Neves and Katie Ramharacksingh. They look at familiar movie stories in the minds of the public, reviewing the fiction and using them as a base for sharing a message of Adventist Hope. The first programme discusses the film 'Avatar'.

The programmes will be running Monday and Thursday each week for the next three months. Part of the strength of the programmes is the great support team that Stefan Stanciu has built up around the SECmedia department. While the team is best known within the Adventist Church for their outside broadcast skills, supporting and live streaming events such as Camp Meeting, and the i-Change BUC Youth Congress, the team of fifteen volunteers have also given countless hours of time throughout this year for filming, editing, research and graphics design. Without them the project could not have happened.

Further information for church members can be found at www.skydream.tv but the main purpose of the programmes is to impact the wider community of the British Isles. SEC President, Pastor Sam Davis says, "Don't just watch the programme yourself, share the information with friends, talk about it at work or school, and use it as a basis for discussion and sharing more fully the faith we have as Seventh-day Adventists."

To watch the programme tune in to Revelation TV (Sky 581 or Freesat 692) or follow the Revelation TV live stream.

CAMP MEETING ORDINATION  [Richard Daley]

Camp Meeting ordination is always a special occasion and this year once again it proved to be just that. The auditorium was filled to capacity on Sabbath 18 June as each row was filled with family members and congregants of the candidates – not to mention the thousands of campers and day visitors. A combined North and South Camp Meeting also meant a combined ordination service, with five candidates.

From the South England Conference (SEC) were Petras Bahadur serving the SEC as the Director for Adventist Muslim Relations, Anthony Opoku-Mensah, from the Norbury and Redhill churches, and Bernard Akakpo from the Clapton Community church. From the North England Conference were Dan Majaducon from the Wednesfield, Dudley and Tipton churches and Victor Dacosta Marshall who serves in Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield Burngreave.

With each candidate introduced by their ministerial mentors the scene was set for an inspiring service with the backdrop of over fifty ordained ministers supporting them on the platform. The opening hymn proclaiming 'So send I you' was a fitting message to the ordainands about to receive their ecclesiastical rites to ministry. It was also a theme that Pastor Henry Wright, guest speaker for the service, expounded upon as he challenged the listening congregation to the importance of their role in working together with their pastors to be used by God in His call to service.

Throughout his sermon Pastor Wright spoke directly to the ordainands sharing with them the key reasons as to why God calls a person to ministry. "Ministry is not your gift to God" he said, "it's God's gift to you!"… "A person is called to ministry so that God can meet your needs," he continued leaving the theologically apt minister pondering as to where Pastor Wright was leading with this gem of truth. All was made very plain and clear as Pastor Wright touched on a number of areas pertaining to the well-being of the minister in balancing time in the work of the church with time for his family. Much emphasis was placed in spending quality time with God. It was an inspiring message which both the newly ordained and those having served many years in ministry found very helpful.

The charge was given by BUC President, Pastor Don McFarlane and the prayer of ordination by BUC Executive Secretary Pastor Eric Lowe. The congregations were united in prayer as the laying on of hands took place, north and south united together under the inspiration of God.
For the ministers' wives gifts were given followed by words of counsel and spiritual guidance by Jennifer Sweeney, wife of NEC President, Pastor Ian Sweeney. Recognising their call to a supporting ministry, each of the wives of the ordinands acknowledged the important role they will make in helping to shape the spiritual direction of their husbands.

The service ended with a response to the charge by Pastor Akakpo – added to by a song of consecration by his wife Marylene. Clearly a team ministry, and representative of five families that God is clearly using in His service.

A selection of ordination photos are available in the BUC picture gallery.

BUC QUINQUENNIAL SESSION CLIMAX THIS WEEKEND

A stimulating Day of Fellowship on Sabbath, 2 July and a one-day business session the next day will climax the British Union Conference Quinquennial Session election process that has been in action since January of this year. Westminster Central Hall is now at capacity for those who reserved tickets. They will enjoy stunning music, the preaching of Pastor Charles A Tapp, senior pastor at the Sligo Seventh-day Adventist church, in Washington, USA, exciting reports of how God is leading His Church, testimonies, and great fellowship.

Delegates will then meet at the Stanborough Park church on Sunday, 3 July to discuss the agenda items in their packs, vote the leadership team for the next five years, and by the end of the day, to discuss the restructuring suggestions presented in a recent edition of MESSENGER – along with the responses that members and ministers have posted on the BUC Session website. Significant decisions from the day will be posted on the BUC News Facebook Page and on Twitter. A full report from the weekend will then be available in next week's BUC News and in MESSENGER.

This year's Session has been a different process to the norm with many committees meeting well before the main Session day. This has given opportunity for more thought and planning in some areas, but there are clearly parts of the process that will need evaluating and refining before the next Session.

Meanwhile, staff at the BUC office took time out on Wednesday lunchtime to enjoy a meal together as an office family, thanking God for the way He has led His Church over the past five years and reminiscing on the highs and lows of the quinquennium. With some staff retiring or moving to other areas post-Session it was also a time to chat together and to confirm friendships. Pastor Don McFarlane, in particular, thanked the support staff.

Full details of the programme for the weekend, the BUC Session Report book and much more is available on the dedicated BUC Session website: www.bucsession.org.uk.
Students at Stanborough Secondary School brought home a record number of medals after an outstanding performance at the Independent Schools Association National Athletics Championships, Wednesday, 22 June. They returned from Birmingham's Alexandra Stadium proudly displaying five medals.

Our 13 regional champions formed part of the London North Division and competed against the other 6 divisions in England. While all of the school's athletes performed excellently Jasper, in Year 5, excelled with not just a bronze medal in High Jump, but also another one in the 4 x 75 m Relay along with team-mates Adam, Ayo and Troy. Their team had the privilege of running on the same track as the American and Jamaican Olympic teams – who are using it as a training base for the forthcoming Olympics. That added to the privilege of winning the bronze medal.

Edwin, in Year 10, won a deserved bronze medal for his Triple Jump, while Bethany, in Year 8, also won a bronze medal for her performance at throwing the Discus. However, the best performance of the day went to Akin, in Year 10, who took the first place on the podium after jumping 1.68 metres. About his experience he commented, "I was a bit surprised and very happy because I broke my personal record of 1.65 metres."

Congratulations to all the regional champions that represented Stanborough School this year at the ISA Championships: Akin (High Jump), Bethany (Discus, 800m and Relay Team), Danielle (Discus), Edwin (Triple Jump), Emmanuel (Discus), India (200m and Relay Team), Shane (Shot Putt), Shalom (Relay Team), Tamara (Relay Team), Adam (Relay Team), Ayo (Relay Team), Jasper (High Jump and Relay Team) and Troy (Relay Team). We are very proud of all of you! A special thanks goes to the teachers, Mr Steyn and Mr McKie for their commendable support.

CORNWALL GETS TO "KNOW ITS NUMBERS" [Chris Peake]

The Royal Cornwall Show is a major event in the West Country calendar. It always feels as though all of Cornwall is there with over 100,000 passing through the turnstiles over three days in early June. While the Adventist church has had a fifty year tradition at the show, this year the churches in Devon and Cornwall (SEC Area 1) went full bore in their stand with the magnificent help of the "Know Your Numbers" health check team led by SEC Health Ministries director, Elsie Staple.

It can be a bit of a challenge in a small area like Devon and Cornwall to get up a good display, so we were especially grateful for the support from the SEC team of eight operatives with supporting cooks, mostly drawn from churches in the London area. They came and stayed at the Chapel Porth campsite so they could drive in each day to check health indicators and give welcome advice. Over the three days of the Show nearly 300 enquirers were dealt with, and a number of good contacts for the churches in Cornwall were made.

It rained, of course, but nothing dampened the spirits of the volunteers who, best of all, agreed to come again next year!
Fiona McKee, a real life member of the Belfast church, has been spending the last nine months witnessing in another world entirely. She has found that the Second Life virtual world has been the platform for her witness and Adventism's newest media outreach!

She told Pastor Weiers Coeters, "I have had the privilege to be part of it. I am able to take on a virtual identity and move around in a world populated with adventurers from every country on earth. You would probably not be surprised if I told you that I found a vibrant community of Seventh-day Adventists there. In fact we have our own church."

So what happens in a virtual church that doesn't happen in Belfast on a Sabbath morning? In reality – there is not a great difference – it is just another opportunity for witness. She says that every week they hold two services, one in English and one in Portuguese. They participate in one Sabbath School Bible study, enjoy listening to amazing stories during story hour and also have a counselling session. They are currently planning a new focus study group for new members.

"So what does a church look like in Second Life?" The church itself is on an upper level. It has pews and a pulpit as you would expect in most typical Seventh-day Adventist churches. "We have some cool technology like giant video screens that play regular television programmes by media ministry, Amazing Facts," she says. But it is on the ground level that the magic begins. "There we have a 3D fully explained tabernacle, a visual demonstration of Daniel's interpretation of the statue in Daniel 2 and tour of prophecy throughout the ages. I am not aware of any real life Seventh-day Adventist church that has such amazing features. Several more pictures from our virtual world are available here."

She has found it an opportunity to witness and be open about her faith and rejoices that one contact, known in Second Life as Starfall plans to get baptised soon – and that will be in the real world! As with everything on the internet, there is need for caution. Second Life is sometimes an escape or a fantasy for those who are challenged in their real life. Some of those fantasies and behaviours are areas that Christians need to stay well away from, yet for the right person it can be a positive opportunity for witness. For more on this story – and perhaps to get involved, visit the Irish Mission website.

In the meantime Fiona says, "As an Adventist presence we felt it was applicable to promote the global nature of our community. Second Life manages to bring people from different nations together into one church locality in a way no other media conferencing can do! Our members come from countries such as Russia, Portugal, Brazil, Spain, Bulgaria, NZ, Australia, UK, Ireland, Germany and several states in the US. It is truly a wonderful experience to 'chat' in one building to people who are literally logging in from their living rooms in Australia or Brazil!"

BLACK ADVENTISTS BEAT THE HEALTH ODDS [Jennifer Frehn/ANN/BUC News]

The Adventist lifestyle is making a health difference in black Americans – giving them a health advantage that contrasts radically with the health disparities between black Americans and the rest of the United States which have been well documented in medical journals.

But a Loma Linda University study shows that US blacks who identify themselves as members of the Seventh-day Adventist Church defy health disparities and report a better quality of life than the average American. Researchers point to certain lifestyle behaviours as a possible explanation for the difference. The research was conducted at Loma Linda University as part of the Adventist Religion and Health Study (ARHS), a study of nearly 11,000 Adventists, including more than 3,400 black Adventists.

Overall, black, as well as white, Adventist study participants reported better physical and mental quality of life than the US norm, in some cases by as much as 4.5 percentage points.

"It is striking that, although in the general population blacks show poorer quality of life on a variety of measures, our results show that black Adventists have a significantly better quality of life than the average American," said Dr Jerry Lee, principal investigator for ARHS.

"This difference is particularly pronounced in older age groups, who progressively demonstrate increased mental health – lower depression, more energy, feeling more calm and peaceful – relative to the general population," Lee said. "This could be a result of the healthy lifestyle choices that are built into the Adventist faith."

Compared to non-Adventist blacks and whites, rates of smoking, drinking, and meat consumption for Adventists were lower, and rates of vegetarianism and water consumption were higher. In addition, about 95 percent of the males and females in the black study cohort attended church weekly or more often, as compared to 30 percent of black males and 50 percent of black females in the General Social Survey – a survey routinely conducted on a sample of the entire US by the National Opinion Research Centre. Adventists, who advocate temperance, a plant-based diet, and setting aside Saturday for worship and family time, have received much coverage in recent years for their longevity and quality of life including the BBC 2 documentary, 'How to live to 101'. That knowledge has given impetus to the many Health Expos and Health programmes being run by Adventists across the British Isles. "Adventists have a fantastic Health Message to run alongside the great news of the Gospel," states British Union Conference Health Ministries director, Sharon Platt-McDonald. "The NHS and other agencies are coming to recognise that this is a Church with an important message for the wider society."

As analysis of data continues, researchers say they expect more results that will have far-reaching implications for improving the health of the black community.

AHS-2 is conducted by researchers at Loma Linda University School of Public Health. For more information, visit <www.adventisthealthstudy.org>.
