ISLE OF MAN LAUNCHES 100th ADRA ANNUAL APPEAL

Church members on the Isle of Man are the first to promote the 100th ADRA Annual Appeal in their local press. As the annual collection for the Adventist Development and Relief Agency starts this Saturday night, Pastor Noel Apugan has gained significant column inches in Isle of Man Courier, thanking island residents for the £7,300 collected last year and explaining the purpose behind this year's collection.

The paper states, "The money will help provide bore holes to rural communities in Bazega, in Burkina Faso, to give easy access to clean water. And it will help 30 'bamboo' schools to given children in the Karen state of Myanmar access to primary education and train their teachers.

Mr Apugan said that every £1 donated was actually worth £6 because there is a top-up from the European Commission."

Adventists are a small but active community on the Isle of Man. Over the next two weeks they are part of a much larger community of volunteers who will be collecting for ADRA. To find out more visit www.adra.org.uk or read the special ADRA edition of MESSENGER.

The ambitious ADRA-UK goal for this year is to raise over £1 million – almost double last year's total. While the small community in the Isle of Man will undoubtedly play their part, other churches are gearing up for action. In Swansea, the local ADRA team is organising a charity curry night. In Scotland volunteers are taking part in the 'challenge Scotland walk'. Weston-Super-Mare church members are planning to use a prime seafront location on Sunday 31 March and Sunday 14 April to promote the work of ADRA-UK. They are planning to model balloons and give these away to children and ask for donations. Banbridge Adventist church has scheduled a charity concert. Meanwhile thousands of volunteers will be knocking on doors in the traditional house-to-house collection – making a difference, one door at a time.

CHATHAM PASSION PLAY PUTS 'THE WORD ON THE STREET' [Katie Ramharacksingh]

Shoppers and onlookers watched and followed as Hungarian opera singer, Katalin Farsang, sang 'Via Dolorosa' as part of the Chatham church's Passion play, performed along the snowy Rochester High Street, on Saturday, 23 March.

The singer captivated those listening as the play, entitled 'The Word on the Street', moved along the High Street then up to Rochester Castle, acting out the final events before Jesus' death and resurrection.

"After everything finished I was speaking to a bystander, a lady who was selling The Big Issue magazine", states Jerry Smith, pastor of Chatham church. "She said she was Pentecostal, but when she saw the actor playing Jesus walking by, bearing the wooden cross, it made her cry. By God's grace I hope we can do more things like this that touch the members of our community."

Pastor Smith and Primrose Roberts, Chatham church Community Services leader, put the play together, getting young and old ready to impact their community, the week before Easter. They contacted Mark Grey, theatre and film director, to help cover some of the bases in the Passion play. They also enlisted the help of some university students, studying fashion design locally, to make the costumes.

The full cast included, Jader Feijo, as Jesus; Andy Aymes, as both a Pharisee and Joseph of Arimathea; and Trina Chee-A-Kwai, who played the angel at the tomb, depicting the beautiful moment where the two Marys are told that Jesus has risen.

"It was such an experience, I think we should do so much more of it, it was exhilarating!" Trina enthused. "To me it was important getting us known. We've been around for a while and some people don't even know our church is here. We wanted to let people know that we're there and we invited people to our Visitors' Day. It was great to meet the public near our church, especially through such an impacting story, and it really got us out of our comfort zone."

The play, and the preceding Chatham Pathfinder drum corps procession, grabbed the attention of High Street shoppers. Children made their parents stop on the street so that they could continue watching. Church members supporting the play spoke to the onlookers about the Easter story and found opportunities to tell them about the upcoming Visitors' Day, on 6 April.

"I think the day was good", commented actor, Andy Aymes. "For me it was actually about not just hiding away in a church, but making people aware that we're there and we're willing to reach out, which goes well with the Easter story."

Andy sees a real benefit to getting out on the street. "Sometimes our churches aren't terribly welcoming, but I think when we go out and do these things in our communities it makes us
It is time to bring down the walls of our churches" claimed Pastor David Neal, President of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Ireland. At the Friday night start of a weekend of meetings near Dublin he stated, "Our Irish Mission churches might have too many walls. We could do with a makeover... and in this way become more attractive and accessible to new or reclaimed church members."

What, on the surface, and to someone who was not present on the night, might seem like a no holds barred critique of our churches, was actually a call to elders and leaders of the Irish Mission to think through the possible barriers that a person with no knowledge or experience of the Seventh-day Adventist Church might need to cross, to find a home in our Adventist churches.

"We need to be aware of the walls that exist that would make this difficult to happen. If I am a typical Irish person, it would be a tremendous obstacle for me to even consider putting my foot into an unknown church. Then I need to come to shift my understanding of religious authority; away from the traditional ecclesiastic structures – towards the Bible. I need to also become accustomed to the particular culture and diversities in a specific congregation." These are all significant hurdles and, according to Pastor Neal, we can do a lot as churches to facilitate these transitions more smoothly.

The comments were made on Friday night, 22 March to a room filled with church leaders, pastors, and departmental leaders from across Ireland and the British Isles. The weekend gathering was convened to discuss the vision and plans of the Irish Mission Cities of Hope project 2013-2015.

"As leaders, we need to reinforce a core value of being God's Church", he stated. "This is the idea that we do not do church merely for our own good and enjoyment... but that we exist for the benefit of others." The presentation was a call to action for congregations in the Irish Mission to evaluate which elements of their service may be self-serving, and how it could be refocused on becoming friendly to those who have yet to discover the joy of being a Seventh-day Adventist.

The presentation set the tone for the rest of the weekend. This elders' meeting was not going to be a run-of-the-mill two days of discussion. A sense of urgency was experienced as elders and pastors knelt together several times during the weekend to pray for God's guidance in our Mission to share a life-changing message to the people of Ireland.

A series of motivating and empowering presentations followed, presented by a cast of visitors that is seldom seen together in a single event in Ireland.
In a highly entertaining and motivational talk Pastor Janos Kovaks-Biro, Evangelism director of the Adventist Church in the Trans-European Region explained that evangelism to the cities can be traced as far back as the time when God used "special submarine technology to deliver Jonah in Nineveh."

A salient point in his call to action was to challenge us to really consider how much we value the truth that we have come to know in our lives: "We only begin to know how important a truth is to us when it becomes a matter of life and death. Truth can also be expressed in many ways – sometimes this can be done most effectively without words."

Several presenters from the headquarters of the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland also participated in this landmark event. Pastor Brighton Kavaloh presented a seminar on how to improve relationships between pastors and elders, Pastor Des Rafferty shared his enthusiasm for the resources available through the Discovery Bible School. Pastor Victor Hulbert's breakout session on communication and modern media became a stimulating discussion. Sharon Platt-McDonald, whose energy seems to be boundless, helped elders discern how useful health ministries can be in reaching people and making a real difference in their lives. In two Sunday morning presentations, Pastor Ian Sweeney focused the elders' minds on the real purpose for being church and for doing church.

The goal has been set to attract 300 new members into the Adventist Church in Ireland over the next three years. Among the initiatives presented to help attract new friends and draw them into fellowship was the 'Jesus 7 Project', 'Becoming a Contagious Adventist' training and 'An introduction to Jesus' programme for Northern Ireland.

On Saturday night, as the Sabbath was drawing to a close, participants spontaneously shared their testimonies. It certainly seemed as though the weekend was successful in bringing out enthusiasm for evangelism and witnessing. Joe Donaldson, a leader in the Banbridge congregation was most definitely impressed by the weekend. "It would seem as though we have a new, spirit-filled, and workable approach to evangelism in the Irish Mission", he said. "It is definitely an approach that I would like to buy into."

CHILDREN'S MASS CHOIR OPENS KIDZ PRAISE FESTIVAL [Katie Ramharacksingh]

A 250-strong children's mass choir sang to a full auditorium at the Watford Colosseum, opening the Kidz Praise Festival, on Sunday, 17 March.

Organised by Barbara Lawrence, Cathy Boldeau and Toyin Aworinde, the afternoon involved 300 children and teens, from across the south of England, performing to an audience of over 700.

"It was amazing, the most wonderful thing I've ever done", expressed Barbara Lawrence. "I'm not saying it wasn't hard work, coordinating 300 children and the leaders, but I loved every minute of it. I think the children were excellent. It was hard to say 'no' to children who wanted to participate, so we allowed everyone to take part; next year will be shorter, but just as good!"
Watford Borough Council Chairman, Councillor Shirena Counter, agrees. "I think an event like this is great," she said, adding, "obviously they've worked really hard, bringing that many children together must have been a logistical nightmare." She called it "a really fun and really buzzing afternoon."

The programme included over 35 performances from church choirs, Pathfinder drum corps, and individual artists. Among these were musical items from Ruxandra Clark, who rewrote the words to her chosen song; seven-year-old Tianna Gentle, who sang 'All of My Life'; and the Newbold church kids' band with a rock twist to their act.

"It was a bit nerve-wracking, but I like performing and singing", commented Ruxandra Clark. "It wasn't a song that I'd been taught, it was a song that I knew very well and I'd taken the music from it and changed the words and that took a while to do!"

Interspersed with the singing were other items, such as a special performance from the 'Kingdom Puppets' and a spectacular display of fast-paced Irish dancing from the girls at the Carter School of Irish Dancing, in Hemel Hempstead. Alongside these were striking instrumentals from saxophonist Ayanobanui Adesina, who played 'Holy, Holy, Holy', and the Lewisham Strings ensemble, with 'Father, I Adore You'.

A rousing Pathfinder drum corps competition, between the Brixton, Chatham, North Wembley and Lewisham churches, was one of the last elements of the day. The technical abilities of the groups were astounding and the winners, from Chatham church, were excited to use their talents back in their local community.

BOOK WITNESS IN REFUGEE CENTRE  [Weiers Coetser]

Shupai Matewa is irrepressible! She may be a refugee hosted in the Irish Republic, but she continually looks for ways to share her faith and is the motivating force behind the recently established Sligo church.

During the Irish Mission Elders' Retreat, 22-24 March 2013, she could not resist telling a remarkable story.

A few months ago she was handed two small evangelistic booklets that detailed the reasons why Seventh-day Adventists keep Saturday as a day of worship. She knew that these books could make a big impact on somebody's life, but how would she find somebody that would be interested to read them? This was a source of some concern. The resources were so few, and the message was so precious.

After a prayer she decided to leave the book at the reception desk of a refugee centre in Sligo. A few days later the book was no longer there and she did not know what had happened to it. Time went by and winter was beginning to turn to spring when one day she sat on a bus on a journey between Dublin and Sligo. She happened on a religious conversation with a fellow passenger.
As conversations with Shupai frequently go, she quickly revealed that she worshipped on a Saturday Sabbath. The fellow passenger became very excited. Apparently a friend had recently handed him a book talking about the very same topic. As a result of reading the book, he felt convinced that Saturday was the real Sabbath.

Shupai wondered what book he was reading. He told her that he received the book from somebody at the Sligo refugee centre. Shupai did not say a word. She said a silent prayer thanking God for letting the right person receive the book. She asked her fellow passenger if he would not mind giving her the details of the book as she would like to read it as well. She also invited him to join them for worship on a Sabbath morning.

During the leadership weekend, Shupai heard that thousands of evangelistic tracts and books would be made available in the run-up to the Irish Mission Cities of Hope evangelism campaign. The resources, which include copies of books written by Mark Finley, the evangelist who will join in the Cities of Hope project, were donated by the Stanborough Press and the Adventist Discovery Centre.

Shupai had a suitcase with her, and she was going to take as many as possible of these resources home with her because for her every one of them would be exceptionally valuable.

Irish Mission church members are becoming well accustomed to the glowing face of Shupai. BUC News reported recently on the joy she felt on a Day of Fellowship in the west of Ireland. Now she is once again full of smiles. In her hands are many books, as many as she could carry. For her, and for the potential readers, the books are like precious jewels in her hands and it made her face shine.

FREEZING NIGHTS: WARM CHURCH [Bea Jackson / Monique Simpson]

An unexpected guest came to visit and volunteer at Willesden church's Winter Night Shelter last week.

Pastor Sam Davis, President of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in the South of England, stopped by on Saturday night, 23 March, interacted with guests and even played Monopoly with guests and two Pathfinder volunteers who were spending the night at church to help out.

"I saw love in action", Pastor Davis states. "Church members mingled freely and effortlessly with the visitors. The meal provided to visitors was also very well appreciated. Some of the visitors were clearly not intending to stay the night but appreciated the meal and the fellowship."

The Winter Night Shelter provides food and a place to stay for the night to homeless people during the winter months. The Shelter project is known as the 'Route 18 Brent Winter Night Shelter', named after the No.18 bus that runs through the area.

The project was set up in 2008 as a local community initiative and is done in partnership with churches, mosques and Brent's homeless charity Cricklewood Homeless Concern. The aim of the scheme is to ensure that no one sleeps rough on the streets during the cold winter months. The Adventist church has been involved in the project right since its inception.

"We, as a church, wanted to participate in the project so that we could be more involved in the community", states Willesden Community Services leader, Bea Jackson. "For me as a leader, it has been a humbling experience, where it has challenged my love for mankind, commitment, spirituality and dependence on God especially when things are not going right or I cannot see God's bigger picture."
However, it is a whole church project and Bea emphasises that without the support, commitment and love of the volunteers in whatever capacity, this project would not have continued for five years.

And as for Pastor Davis and his game of Monopoly? When asked he responded, "It was very relaxed and enjoyable and the church became a user-friendly place where those seeking a shelter from the elements could come. There was a winner of the Monopoly game but I have to protect the feelings and confidentiality of those in attendance."

WATCH OUT FOR THE SHEEP, THEY BITE! [Katie Ramharacksingh]

"Incorrect labels can be a life or death issue", explained Tom Evans, Associate director at the North American Division Evangelism Institute (NADEI), at the three-day Natural Church Development (NCD) training at the Stanborough Centre, 19-21 March.

The training, organised by the South England Conference's Church Growth department, began with exploring how 'warning labels' can be detrimental to the health of a church. Pastors present explored warning labels that can have a negative impact on new church members, even if they are used misguidedly to try and be helpful. Labels included "loudest is not necessarily the rightest" and "watch out for the sheep, they bite!"

Natural Church Development is a way of looking at church growth and addressing deeper issues that a church may be facing, rather than just looking at member statistics. The roots of a church are examined through an assessment of specific church characteristics, which is taken through a questionnaire completed by a minimum of 30 members in each church.

One intriguing part of the training looked at improving both visitors' and church members' experiences by paying attention to the seemingly little details. Elements such as having parking attendants to welcome people on arrival, keeping toilets clean and maintaining a good flow of service can all contribute to making church a more welcoming place.

"I think the training has been long overdue!" enthused Rosemary Lethbridge, pastor of the Watering Hole church plant. "The quality was brilliant and transcended all people groups and ethnicities. It gave us areas to celebrate but also tangible areas to work on to make sure we maintain a quality church; our church members and community deserve to be part of the very best church we can be."

YOU2HIM FOR CAMP HILL & YARDLEY YOUTH [Dionne Brown]

Drama, Bible study, a quiz night, preaching, testimony night and an evening of praise all made for a Week of Prayer with a difference for Camp Hill and Yardley youth.
You2Him was the name of the week-long programme between 17 and 23 March, and each night had a different message and format. There was nothing boring here!

Senior pastor Patrick Herbert and intern pastor Jonathan Holder used the Week of Prayer reading to plan an engaging week. Additional special features included the pattie and pineapple juice refreshments given to early attendees, and the pastoral duo providing a special item on clarinet and guitar.

Daniel Blydon said, "Wednesday's evening programme was a playful reflection on God's love and the sacrifice He made by sending His Son. The structure of the programme took the form of a quiz show, which was designed to lead us into a powerful message. It also provided a more relaxed and friendly atmosphere to share and connect with one another."

Much was done to encourage participation and attendees said the You2Him was a blessing and inclusive of everyone. Thursday night was testimony night and everyone was given the opportunity to share their experiences of Christ leading in their lives. Tariro Mandisodza said, "I really enjoyed Thursday night. It was great to hear such experiences from my peers, whom I can relate to more."

Natasha Edwards added, "For me Thursday and Friday were the highlight of the week, through hearing the testimonies of our youth and through the individual prayers where the pastors prayed for us individually, it gave me an up lift that at the time I needed to motivate my walk with Christ and to remember through Christ all things are possible even when I myself cannot see it."

Anton Chisholm agrees. "You2Him provided a real reminder of my duty as a Christian and the fact that I am just a vessel in which God will use me as He wants to further His work. We are all called to serve and I will gladly and boldly take up that challenge to maximize what talents God has given to me, and to hasten our Lord's soon return."

Relationship was important for Danielle Stevens. "I think that You2Him was very relatable as well as engaging. With Youth Week of Prayer it allowed us to get to know one another as well as involve ourselves with Camp Hill. I really did enjoy the programme and it was my first so I plan to attend the ones to come."

Camp Hill Youth Committee promoted the week by uploading comments, pictures and videos on their Youth Facebook page. This was a great way of keeping everyone informed of activities. In spite of snowy weather conditions on Friday, Praise Night was well attended.

You2Him drew to a close on Sabbath 23 March with a youth emphasis service at Yardley church. Youth from both churches collaborated by taking the lead in the praise teams and special items. Pastor Holder's sermon, 'A simple message', reminded youth of the importance of focusing on Christ through the Three Angels' messages of Revelation 14. Noting the emphasis, "Fear God and give him glory... which is the whole duty of man", we were challenged to make Christ the very focus of our lives. This was a very timely message and a great way of concluding the You2Him Week of Prayer.
SIMPLE CHURCH RETREAT - A FIRST FOR SOUTH ENGLAND
[Asha Wije / Kirsten Øster-Lundqvist]

A weekend of fellowship and inspiration in Reading led 'Simple Church' leaders to ask "Does it get any more real than this?" Five Simple Church groups from around the South England Conference met 18-20 March. Their purpose, according to Pastor Aris Vontzalidis, SEC Director of Church Planting and Evangelism, was, "to experience God through fellowship."

He stated, "It is important for Simple Church missionaries to meet and share with each other and we are delighted that friends of the Simple Church groups and the Swedish Simple Church could join us."

Each Simple Church has a different ministry focus, ranging from ministry in the workplace, children's ministries, ministry to those with alcohol and drugs issues, and ministry to the sick and elderly. One Simple Church focuses on reaching secular Lithuanians.

When one attendee recognised, "I've just realised that you guys are my family", the diverse group came together. The love and unity of purpose became tangible and the conclusion from the weekend was that "We need to meet often!"

Simple Church in the UK is part of a Global Network, partnered with Adventist Mission, the missionary arm of the Adventist World Church. IT IS ROCKET SCIENCE FOR ADVENTIST STUDENTS
[Kirsten Øster-Lundqvist]

Adventist pupils have their eyes on space after a fun science day at Cambridge University on Tuesday, 19 March. Pupils from John Loughborough, Little Eden and Hyland House Adventist schools were to experience science in a whole new way.

With a carefully planned day out, these London based pupils started the day with a guided tour of The Sainsbury Laboratory at the University of Cambridge, a new research institute studying plant science. However, the main focus of the day was the experiments in Cambridge's Engineering department. Irena Borzym, a mathematician, shared her dream of going into space, and how this might be a real possibility in the near future.

This set the scene for building rockets. Instructed by Maria Kettle, the pupils were divided into small teams with members from the different schools. The task was to build a 3D structure from paper to support a launch platform from where they would launch their paper rocket.

The pupils got excited as they saw the project take shape. "The best thing was to make the rocket", exclaimed Aliah Montero from John Loughborough School. Shyan Martin, also from John Loughborough disagreed. "The best thing was the rocket launch, especially when you heard it go pop." The Engineering department courtyard became the launch site for the teams' rockets. The challenge was to make it to the top of the seven story building, something most of the teams managed to do – accompanied by great delight and cheers.

"The main focus of the day was to inspire and enrich the pupils' science experience" explains Opal Johnson-Christie, South England Conference Education director. "The new key stage 2 curriculum prescribes the need for more hands-on work", she stated. "I want to give the children an opportunity to experience science."

Groups were awarded best teamwork, most original design and highest flying rocket. But as the leader of the day, Maria Kettle, stated, there was something positive in all the teams' products.

"It's good for the pupils to work in teams with children from other Adventist schools," says Opal Johnson-Christie, "and it's equally good for the science teachers to connect with each other. It is my hope that we can develop a science community among our pupils, and days like this hopefully will inspire more children to be excited about science."
