CRISIS BOOT CAMP LAUNCHES NEWBOLD'S CENTRE FOR CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP

Staff from Newbold College of Higher Education and the British Union Conference (BUC) joined together this week to attend a workshop that launched the College's new Centre for Christian Leadership (CCL), a department of the College that, from Spring 2015, will offer short courses for the Church community.
"Through the CCL we will provide evening, full day and weekend courses to enable lay members and pastors throughout the BUC to update their skills – and to acquire new ones – in mission, evangelism, ministry and spiritual leadership", said Newbold's Principal, Dr John Baildam. "The courses will span the theoretical and the practical, and will give participants the chance to fellowship with one another while learning."

Twenty staff from Newbold and the BUC attended the CCL's inaugural offering, Crisis Boot Camp, on Monday, 2 March. Led by Celeste Ryan Blyden, Vice President for Strategic Communication and Publications for the Columbia Union Conference in North America, she gave attendees the opportunity to learn just what to do - and how to effectively communicate - when there is a crisis.

Crisis Boot Camp also included the opportunity for attendees to work with practical examples and challenging case studies. "We were able to engage in stimulating group work that gave us clarity on some important issues, with a touch of humour", said Pastor Bjørn Ottesen, Head of the Department of Theological Studies at Newbold.

The course also helped attendees to understand how, as Seventh-day Adventists, to integrate kindness, compassion, and grace into their communications during tough situations. "Celeste helped me to understand that every crisis is an opportunity [to express sympathy and show the kind of people we are]", said Pastor Llew Edwards, BUC Ministerial Association Secretary.

The course was more than just theoretical. South England Conference President, Pastor Sam Davis is already experiencing the practical results. "I particularly enjoyed the role play of responding to a crisis and having to write our own statement," he stated. "The benefit of that exercise came home to me today when one of the pastors contacted me with exactly the same scenario being played out in his church. I was empowered to assist him and point him in the right direction with confidence."

WANDERING BATHTUB ATTRACTS ATTENTION IN BALLYMONEY

Where would you look for a Seventh-day Adventist if you visited Ballymoney in Northern Ireland on a typical Friday? They might be hard to find because there are only two of them! But this would not have been the case on Friday, 27 February. This was the day when David and Irene Dickie invaded the town centre, with a handful of friends by their side. Together they wielded a bathtub on wheels, familiar red T-shirts, and buckets with the British Heart Foundation logo. In a matter of five hours they pushed the bathtub, filled with Heart Foundation balloons around the town centre – twice! In the process they raised more than £1,000 in donations for a cause that is close to their own hearts.

Joining them for the day I have to admit that I was a bit dubious about this strange idea. The wind was frigid when two of David’s work colleagues dropped us off, along with the bath, close to the centre of town.

There was not much fanfare. We simply set about pumping up balloons. It was difficult to keep them all from blowing away before we could hand them out.

At 10:00 am, the Mayor, Bill Kennedy, arrived to set us off. Mr Kennedy is a great supporter of charities, having made the news himself three months ago when he cancelled the Mayor’s Christmas lunch, instead donating the money budgeted for the event to a local food bank.

As a journalist took some photos we started our journey, pushing the bath into the High Street. Among the first to exercise their muscles pushing the bath was well known town councillor, Ian Stevenson, a representative of the local DUP party. Behind him the cars patiently slowed down
As the rest of us followed, wielding red buckets at bemused passers-by.

Billy Dickie, David’s brother, took over the helm behind the bath after a while. Billy joked that he still had not learned to say no to his brother. The reality is quite different. Billy and David both have personal reasons for supporting this charity. A few years ago both of the brothers experienced heart attacks within 9 months of each other. The medical care that they received saved their lives. "We are both keen to give back to the organisations that provide support for those who suffer heart disease", they confessed, noting they would not be here today if it was not for their care and expertise.

David has established a tradition of raising funds for the British Heart Foundation. Last year he ran a successful coffee morning in the local Presbyterian church-hall. His efforts were recognised at an annual reward ceremony conducted by the Foundation in 2014. His next fundraiser will be on Thursday, 16 April, when he is arranging a variety music concert starring some of Ballymoney’s favourite performers. "People are already asking about where they can buy tickets", he stated.

It was not all hard work pushing the bath through town. Halfway through the exercise the bath was parked on the side of the road and we took turns warming up in Anne’s bakery, a coffee shop situated inside the local Pet and Country store. They laid out some scones and tea in support of the fundraising effort.

David Clydesdale, long-time friend, and church member from the Banbridge area, stationed himself at an intersection in town. Bobby Davis, another supporter of the cause, did the same on the other side of town. Here, car after car stopped, wound down their windows, and emptied the change in their purses in support of the good cause. People could be seen walking all over town with red British Heart Foundation stickers or balloons. Some people even donated twice.

The success of the day lived on via Facebook and Twitter. Photos circulated and the results were posted. "At last count, the day brought in £1,100. But some pledges were made that still needs to be added to the count of the day", reports a delighted Irene Dickie. Irene and David both agree that this was a day of leave from work.
that was very well spent.

Personally, I was impressed by how well known David and Irene are in Ballymoney. The chances are that if you stopped in Ballymoney on any Friday and asked for them by name, or even asked for a Seventh-day Adventist, it would not be long before somebody could point you to David and Irene’s home.

REFURBISHED NORTH WEMBLEY COMMUNITY CHURCH REOPENS

A north-west London community is celebrating the reopening of one of its churches. The North Wembley Seventh-day Adventist Community church, situated at the corner of Sudbury Avenue and East Lane shut early last year to carry out essential repairs.

It has now been fully refurbished in a project involving the community of members in and around North Wembley to ensure the facility, amongst other things, caters for the needs of the elderly, disabled, children and youth in the immediate vicinity.

In a special rededication service on Sabbath, 14 February, President of the South England Conference of the Adventist Church, Pastor Sam Davis, reminded members that the church had been refurbished to help them serve the community better. The church now has improved facilities which seat approximately 350 people and is just a short walk from the North Wembley train and tube station.

The local Pathfinder and Drum Corps clubs will now resume activities in the facility, helping to educate the young in practical and exciting outdoor activities.

Local minister, Pastor Wilfred Blake said that members plan for the building to be put to a variety of community uses, as well as worship, and envisages the church setting up welfare resources such as a Food Bank and social advice for the most vulnerable.

PREPARING FOR THE CRISIS THAT WILL 'NEVER HAPPEN'

It is the scenario every pastor dreads. A headline in the media that drags their church into disrepute. A news story, true or otherwise, that attacks a church member, a minister, the activities of their church, but most importantly, damages the reputation of a body of people who are trying to share the love of God in their community. What do you do when suddenly such a crisis lands on your doorstep?

The British Union Conference Communication department regularly runs training programmes to help ministers and leaders deal effectively with such crisis situations and on Tuesday, 3 March, it ran a full day programme for ministers in conjunction with the Ministerial Association and Evangelism departments as part of the continuing education programme for ministers.

For trainer, Celeste Ryan Blyden, this was the climax to a full week of sharing at the SEC GAIN Conference, the Newbold Centre for Christian Leadership, and now BUTREC (British Union Conference Training Resource Evangelism Centre).

Oxford pastor, Jonathan Burnett stated afterwards that "I was interested and inspired by the Crisis Management training. I learned the importance of preparing to manage a crisis before one is even on the horizon."

And those crises are happening – as revealed in the discussions. Welsh Mission President, Pastor John Surridge really engaged with the process. "The best thing about today's seminar was Celeste herself. Her bubbly personality and disarming smile quickly put everyone at their ease and enabled people to speak openly and honestly about some of the crisis situations they had faced in their own ministry."

Celeste speaks from 15 years of experience dealing with Crisis Management. Now serving as Assistant to the President for Communication at the Columbia Union in the USA, she has helped manage the Church through situations from the FBI Waco siege in Texas through arson attacks, sexual abuse cases, financial issues and sometimes, simply a minister being quoted out of context on social media.

For BUC Youth Ministries director, Pastor Nathan Stickland, this kind of training has "made me stop and think about stopping and thinking, before we rush into making a statement about a situation that lands us in a bigger crisis."

Celeste had a second purpose in sharing her skills with ministers. She is concerned with the kind of image a church projects – sometimes what the business world calls 'branding'. As ministers discussed together they hoped that their churches are known for being 'Christ like', 'kind' and 'accepting'. Other words like balanced, relevant and community-orientated also came into the equation. Positive statements like this contrast with being known as the church which blocks all the local parking on a Saturday, makes too much noise, or keeps stuffing unwanted tracts through my door. When there are positive relationships with the local community then there will also be more positive responses should a crisis come.

BUTREC training runs until 3:00 pm to allow ministers to head back for their evening appointments. However, this programme was so engaging that the time kept getting pushed back and it was almost 4:00 pm before Basildon pastor, Jerry Smith could exclaim on his way out the door that it was illuminating. "A helpful look at how to give advanced thought to preparing for when crisis moments arise."

NEWBOLD TEAM RACING TO RAISE FUNDS IN HALF MARATHON

A team of Seventh-day Adventists will compete in the 2015 Reading half marathon this month to raise money for charity. The team, which includes Pastor Alastair Agbaje, Chaplain and Dean of Men at Newbold College of Higher Education, Newbold alumnus and pastor of the Brighton and Hove Adventist church, Pastor Julian Thompson, and several Newbold students, aims to raise money both for the Adventist Development and Relief Agency (ADRA) and the Micro and Anophthalmic Children's Society (MACS).

Pastor Agbaje said that although competing on Sunday, 22 March would be a challenge, the group feels confident because of the training they have undergone during their weekly Prayer Run – a prayer ministry for Newbold students and staff that offers the opportunity to worship and pray together while developing their fitness.
School of English student, Antonia Harre, is one of the regular prayer runners who signed up for the half marathon. "We have been engaged in reaching out to students through our Prayer Run, but now we are reaching out to different people: our sponsors and those who will be present at the marathon", said Antonia. "Our prayer ministry is growing!"

The group's participation in the marathon builds on Newbold's growing culture of volunteer service and connecting to the local community through regular opportunities for outreach and ministry. "One of the reasons our team chose to support MACS, in particular, is because it is a local charity, and we are passionate about supporting our local community", said Pastor Agbaje.

"We also hope to use our participation in the marathon as an opportunity for ministry, and anticipate engaging in meaningful conversations with the community, being asked who we are and what our beliefs are, whilst learning about others in our community", said team member and Newbold theology student Tremon Jackson.

"I strongly believe that when we meet people at their point of interest or need, strong bridges are built and this is what we want to achieve from the marathon. And of course we endeavour to keep fit and healthy!" added Pastor Agbaje.

MAYOR IMPRESSED BY LEWISHAM PATHFINDER INVESTITURE

Lewisham Mayor, Sir Steve Bullock, was impressed by Adventist Pathfinders during an investiture service at Lewisham Seventh-day Adventist church on Sabbath, 28 February.

He was escorted into the church to the sound of the drum corps as the Pathfinders marched in with their usual impeccable form. The procession was led by young Dante Grant cradling the Bible, with his sister Aria at his side. The church's pastor, James Phillip strode behind, accompanying the Mayor and with Pathfinder club leader Jennifer Anti, as the rest of the club followed.

There was a notable air of pride in the room; not just from the proud parents but from the entire body of the church as the majority of its youth stood, smartly clad in their uniforms. It was clear that the theme for the day was that of excellence and exceptional achievement among our youth. The Pathfinders' discipline and thorough leadership was further demonstrated throughout the service, even through smaller items like the collection of the offering, which was done quickly and efficiently.

Delivering her director's report, Anti shared that the Pathfinder club is 150 members strong and is part of a global organisation of over two million and counting. She then proceeded to outline the club's many achievements during 2014, including visiting the elderly, attending Tooting Ghanaian church's first Pathfinder Day, opening Downham church's first Pathfinder club, learning skills at a curriculum weekend and at regular club sessions, witnessing, attending the Oshkosh Camporee in the USA, community car washes and the tradition of taking part in Lewisham Borough's annual Remembrance Day parade. One of the club's greatest achievements however was that five Pathfinders were baptised last year and another five already this year. We were also informed that the club's previous leader Marlene Litchmore has started a Pathfinder club in Dubai, where she is currently teaching.

Sir Bullock thanked the Pathfinders for their presence at the Remembrance Day ceremony. He stated how impressed he was with the club overall: their uniforms, the disciplined way in which they entered the church, and their commitment to their work. He then went on to say the Pathfinders are not only a credit to their proud families but also to the Borough of Lewisham. He discussed the city of London and how it is both a place of opportunity and success but also at times, extremely dangerous, and also talked about the youth who are at risk in society, those who do not belong to a family or a wider community like the church, and stressed the importance of groups such as the Pathfinders in today's society.

A short sermon was preached by Michael Agyei, a young man of Ghanaian heritage who was actually dedicated in Lewisham church many years ago, and who is now a leader at his local church as well as a preacher, motivational speaker, singer, and poet. His message echoed the words of the Mayor as he expressed pride in the club and went on to discuss what it's like living in the Borough of Lewisham: to judge it by the statistics alone one may argue the cons outweigh the pros, but Michael, like the Mayor argued that the deviants among us are only a small minority. He continued to praise the youth, and spoke on the importance of their being of assistance to the community.

His sermon, entitled 'Call of Duty: Spiritual Warfare' was brief but powerful and a perfect transition leading into the investiture ceremony where each beaming face in the club was presented with a certificate and a handshake from the Mayor. There were also special awards given for 'Most Improved Pathfinder' (Kayann Barnes) as well as Adventurer, Pathfinder and Junior Councillor of the Year, which were awarded to Toby Mocc, Kayla Guthrie and Kyle Terrode. Gifts of thanks were presented to Sir Bullock for his presence and to Director Anti for her hard work with the club over the years.

BEING ECONOMICAL WITH THE TRUTH

Victor Pilmoor, BUC Treasurer, guest speaker at the London Adventist Credit Union, (LACU) AGM on Sunday, 8 February 2015, posed a conundrum in the essence of his address: being economical with the financial truth within the spiritual sphere.

Mr Pilmoor stated that "While the Adventist prophetic view includes moral, religious and political outcomes, it is relatively silent on the major economic forces that affect most of our lives." He noted that in "seeking to bring relevance to our message, we have sought to contextualise beliefs with forays into legalism, literalism, behaviourism, relationalism, Darwinism, secularism and postmodernism while paying scant regard to the one force to which we are all hostage: the economy."

Notably, the LACU endeavours to be completely generous with 'the truth' in its holistic approach to the Christian life. In addition to the saving and lending services provided by the LACU, the organisation facilitates events such as the 4th Careers Fair, held at the Brixton church, on 15 February 2015. There, enthusiastic young people from Aylesbury to West Bromwich, ferried by their Youth leaders and parents, were advised by a risk analyst at Network Rail, a barrister at the Serious Fraud Office, an accountant at EY, a physician assistant and a senor midwife in the NHS, a Science teacher, a psychologist, a civil engineer at the Department of Transport, and other professionals in a variety of fields.
The LACU is extremely blessed with, and thankful for, the professionals who volunteer their time to share their knowledge and experience with our young people within the BUC, demonstrating that we are not being economical with the truth. At the LACU we embrace the belief that a well-educated, financially astute cohort of young people will move forward expeditiously, in keeping with our Master’s command in Matthew 28:18-20.
