NEWCASTLE HEALTH EXPO LEAPS FROM CHURCH INTO LOCAL HOUSING COMPLEX

The practical culmination of the health missionary training conducted in the Newcastle Seventh-day Adventist church by representatives of LIGHT, Lay Institute for Global Health Training, was a health expo conducted in Cruddas Park flats, just across from the church, on Thursday, 20 August.
Although only recently recognised as 'our village' this residential block has overshadowed the church for years. A previous pastor, Melvyn Ellis, developed links with a now closed community centre within the block. We decided it was time to rebuild the connections.

The expo itself was arranged by Rudo Sibanda, Newcastle church Community Services leader, in cooperation with Violeta Lernacinska, the Tenancy and Estates Officer from Your Homes Newcastle who operate the building.

Violeta expressed she loved "the work you are doing, the professionalism and the attire of the staff manning the booths."

The team, who had just completed their training at the health missionary school staffed all of the expo stations with some extra help from local church members. Each pair caring for the expo stations had been trained in their respective tasks and could give simple health talks about their role – which was to encourage people to take greater charge of their own health.

A highlight of the whole expo was the chair massage to relax tired and stressed muscles. The week's training in church, accompanied to the sound of backs being caressed with gentle hand strokes to the rather more vigorous sounds of 'cupping' and 'chopping' led to a confidence which showed that one-time novices were now experts in their new tasks.

Following the expo, local members on the health team now suggest that cooking schools with massage is, 'the way forward' for Newcastle church.

Health checks were not the only elements of the expo. Time was taken to seek to develop friendships with visitors. One estimate suggested that 40 people came over during the three-hour period. Time was spent with individuals, some of whom went away with invitations to do the 'Take charge of your health' correspondence course from the Adventist Discovery Centre. We have already seen the good effects of this course with our Church elder, Victor Samwinga, came away from the event with these thoughts, "I came back tired, of course, but greatly blessed myself. I saw so much brokenness; I heard so much pain, anger, stress and loneliness! We as their neighbours can offer people genuine friendship, minister to their needs, gain their confidence and point them to the One who can satisfy their souls' greatest desires."

A LIGHT IN THE NORTH – A MISSION TO THE COUNTRY

The LIGHT health missionary training course, held during the month of August in far-off Newcastle upon Tyne has ended leaving 22 students feeling equipped to serve in some form as Health Missionaries. That was the assertion made at the course graduation on Sabbath, 29 August as Cynthia Bonas, lead trainer and veteran teacher for the LIGHT programme made her closing remarks.

The course aimed to offer a holistic approach to outreach for students from around the UK. They turned out to be a diverse group including West Africans, Southern Africans, Eastern Europeans and even some west-coast Americans. Youngest to attend was seven-year-old Samppa who made sure that during the graduation he gave his testimony, having already demonstrated his skill as a relaxation masseur during the morning service on his friend and fellow attendee, Michael.

The thought of a month 'way up north' was always going to be a daunting prospect. Sinda brought her slightly older children to the event from Liverpool. Keith's confession was, "when my Mum told me I was going to spend the whole of my summer holiday in Newcastle..." However, the outcome was fine as Keith and his sister both enjoyed and benefitted from the experience.
They, like the other students, probably gained more than they expected. Where else would a committed Seventh-day Adventist go into good detail about preparing for the time of the end? Where else could they go to learn how to run and participate in an excellent health expo? Where else would they find one of the people whose health had been checked coming to church the very next Sabbath? Where else, would other members of the community around the church express, as did Peter, that he wished we had reached more people with our advertising as the expo programme was just what was needed?

While all of this may sound rather 'heavy' and very 'vegan', the atmosphere definitely had its lighter moments. Cynthia became known as 'the Duchess' and vegan foods became a hit even outside of the classroom. The visiting North England Conference Treasurer, Rejoice Kampengele, was observed enjoying a really tasty vegan ice cream, prepared in minutes, while church members joined with the students in enjoying a pomegranate cheesecake that would do any bake-off proud.

Newcastle Adventist church members have learned that they can care for numbers of people with some style. Head chef, JR Narciso, was described by Cynthia Bonas as the provider of "the best food I have ever had on one of my training trips." The church has also learnt that they can develop a relationship with people over time. The visitors found that an initial warm welcome continued throughout the whole of the four weeks of the event.

NEC Health director, Grace Walsh, affirmed that more health missionary training would be offered in future, giving more people from around the north of England the chance to develop a holistic approach to health and healing.

The trainers concluded the graduation exercise by challenging students with the thought from John 20, "So send I you." Over twenty trainees had been equipped with enthusiasm, spiritual direction and technical skills to be able to go and minister to people in need and offer hope where none had existed before. Now was the time for the theory and training to turn into practice in their own, home communities.

A combination of Brazilian, British and Indian skills brought a breath of new life to an orphanage this summer. Kish Poddar, a teacher at Stanborough School and a director of the charity, STOP International brings this report.

On Monday, 3 August 2015, I travelled the two hours from the town of Hosur, India to Bangalore International Airport to meet a team of volunteers from England for a STOP International Orphanage project. Aila and Anna had travelled over 14 hours to get to India. Paul and I had arrived two weeks earlier to get everything ready.

The aim this summer was to paint and decorate the accommodation of the Way to Life Children's Home. This was funded by STOP International and built in 2008. It is home to fifty-one orphan children who reside under the care of Pastor Abraham and Selvi.

The volunteers began the work of painting with rollers and brushes and with the help of local labourers managed to complete nearly half of the work. After just four days I returned to Bangalore Airport to pick up the rest of the volunteers arriving from Brazil. The twelve members from Bokoram Adventist church were led by Pastor Fabio (senior pastor) and Pastor Daniel Meder (youth pastor). They were thrilled to be in India, hooting and cheering in delight, Brazilian style, as they walked through the exit doors to greet me with hugs as I handed out Indian flags to welcome them. It was their first visit to India and to add to the experience their English was limited, so even their delightful greetings at the airport had to be translated. However, the enthusiasm of their arrival bode well for the coming week of physical labour.

Each day started with a short worship together with the lovely children and then a 20-minute walk to drop them at school before returning to work. With the additional volunteers the work of painting progressed fast. Inside walls completed, the team then tackled the outside walls, doors and windows and frames. They also painted themselves – with copious amounts of sunscreen.
Pastor Fabio is a cartoonist and came up trumps decorating the classrooms with wonderful drawings of Jesus with children, David and Goliath, Daniel in the lions' den, Caleb and Joshua, Jonah and many more. The children were delighted. The orphans were not only the beneficiaries but also the benefactors. Their spontaneous love and childlike innocence overwhelmed the volunteers with compassion and blessedness. Their expression of uninhibited affection during worship, games and recreation was new to the volunteers who had not experienced this before in their home country.

The final farewells needless to say were tearful and emotional with hugs and kisses on both sides.

Having completed painting the huge building it looked clean, new and welcoming. In addition the roof was repaired and a number of little maintenance projects were completed to make the accommodation feel like home. So it was only appropriate to have a photograph taken in front of the building with all the children and volunteers. On Sabbath the children together with the volunteers celebrated the 69th Independence Day and then proceeded to celebrate the Sabbath with special music from the children as well as the volunteers. After a delicious lunch everyone went for a Sabbath walk into the country and a Bible quiz which the girls won.

I was delighted to make a presentation of a cheque of £4,800 to the Way to Life Children's Home, money raised by Ricardo, Ravindra and myself during our London to Paris sponsored cycle ride, as well as the funds raised by John Cooper from his Land's End to John o'Groats cycle ride. [See 11 June 2015 report.] These funds will pay for the school fees for all 51 children for the current school year.

The volunteers returned home – but left part of their heart in India. Pastor Meder said that it is projects such as this that give meaning to Christian experience and consolidate faith in God. It seems the team will be back. Anyone interested in being involved in a future STOP International missionary project please contact kishpoddar@onetel.com.
HOLLOWAY HOSTS SEC STEWARDSHIP SUMMIT

Over fifty Stewardship leaders, treasurers, elders and pastors joined 400 individuals to attend the fourth South England Conference (SEC) Stewardship Summit from Friday, 7 to Sabbath, 8 August at Holloway Seventh-day Adventist church.

Dr Roland Hill, along with his wife, Dr Susie Hill, were the presenters for the weekend. Dr Hill, senior pastor for the Maranatha/Penuel churches in Fredericksburg/Brandy Station, Virginia, has been in the gospel ministry for 40 years and is the author of 18 books. He partners with his wife Susie, a World Languages Instructor, Certified Family and Consumer Scientist (CFCS), a Certified Family Life Educator (CFLE) and a former professor of Family Studies at Texas Woman's University. Between them they have conducted over 500 presentations worldwide and in many different denominations, sharing their passion for stewardship.

Friday night's sermon, 'Vision Delayed but Not Destroyed', taken from Habakkuk 2:1-3, was a powerful presentation on vision and wetted the congregation's appetite for the Sabbath School presentation on 'Pentecostal Giving', preceded by a lesson summary conducted by the SEC Stewardship director, Dr Richard de Lisser.

Dr Roland Hill's Sermon, 'It's Bigger Than Me', was based on Genesis 24:1-12, when Abraham charged his servant Eleazer, to find a wife for his son Isaac. In his appeal to the congregation, Dr Hill pointed out that for Eleazer, failure was not an option, as success was the only outcome he sought for his master Abraham. We too are on a mission for the kingdom that is bigger than us. Success is assured if we are obedient and follow the will of God.

To close the service, the congregation, and in particular the Holloway church members, were invited to sign a Pledge of Faith to assist with the redevelopment and refurbishment of the church's accommodation and servicing facilities. The influential and pioneering Holloway church, the mother of many other Seventh-day Adventist churches in north London has served the needs of many thousands of members since its purchase in 1927. In need of refurbishment, the expected new facilities will include a large multifunction hall, a larger sanctuary with balcony and function rooms to facilitate members and community activities.

There was a lively positive response from the congregation with many pledging immediately to support this fundraising initiative to raise £1.3 million before March 2016. Approximately £25,000 was immediately raised with one individual member pledging an additional sum of £20,000.

Senior pastor, Vince Goddard, is impressed, but adds, "You too can freely give to help make this great mission a success by becoming a partner with Happy, Holy, Healthy Holloway!" He is accepting pledges via communications@myholloway.org.

In the afternoon, the seminar 'Wealth Creation: the Adventist Advantage', ended the Stewardship Summit on a high and charged the Stewardship leaders to lead God's people to the next level of loving service to God and to our neighbours!

TEEN'S TESTIMONY SHOWS THE DIFFERENCE CAMP MAKES

Faith Norman hit her 15th birthday just before heading to the South England Conference Extreme Teens Camp in Chapel Porth, Cornwall, 16-23 August. She is a regular camper and so decided to bring you this report of the difference camp makes for her:

My personal experiences at Teens' Camp have been unforgettable. I have thoroughly enjoyed each and every year that I have been. The camp is held at Chapel Porth, near the town of St Agnes in Cornwall, right beside the sea. The scenery is absolutely breathtaking.

The activities that I took part in this summer were very entertaining – such as a bike ride with stunningly beautiful views of the Cornish countryside – and a finish at Portreath beach where most of us jumped into the refreshing sea!

We also took part in paintballing and kayaking which were very intense, competitive and challenging. However, as we worked together in teams, we grew closer to people we barely knew at the start.

I find that whenever I come to Teens' Camp, I am able to relax and have fun with my friends and it is also a lovely 'extra holiday' I get during the summer.

Not only is it a holiday, but it is a way to get closer to God in an environment where people from completely different backgrounds, share the same religion as you. The daily evening service is a way to really connect with God and get to know about the Bible a little more. There are preachers that are invited to come and speak every year and they tell the most amazing, and inspiring stories of their life, of how they grew closer to God and what we can change in our lives, to do the same.
There are testimonies which are normally held just before Sabbath, when anyone can share stories of how God has blessed their lives. I would go to Teens' Camp if you want a small getaway, because it is the best place to relax with friends and pastors who you can talk to and have fun with during your stay.

On Sabbath, there is a service in the morning, and there is also a walk which goes around the coastline and the sea stretches for miles, which shows us God's awesome creation. If you are keen to meet new people or expand your knowledge of God or even if you don't know God, and want to learn more about Him, I would recommend the camp, because it is a great week spent and not wasted in bed!

SAFE GIVING WITH ADRA-UK

UK charities have been in the media in recent weeks over what is termed 'fundraising harassment'. Donor database information from some charities has been sold-on – sometimes as many as 200 times and, according to a report this week, occasionally to fraudsters.
William Shawcross, the Charity Commission chairman, told the Times newspaper, "The plethora of stories of people being deluged by mailings and harassed by endless telephone calls on behalf of charities are intolerable." People are 'cold-called' and pressured to make donations. Commercial companies make such calls on behalf of charities and are paid commission to raise funds.

Is there a safe way to give to charity knowing that my donation and details are secure – and that my details are not going to be sold on? ADRA-UK is the development and relief charity operated by the Seventh-day Adventist church in the UK. CEO, Bert Smit, emphasises that their fund raising is ethical – partly because of its faith base.

"There are many different ways to engage in fundraising and here at ADRA-UK we have decided to do so in an ethical way", Smit stated. "Firstly, our fundraisers are unpaid volunteers who carry out all door-to-door collections. Secondly, we have consciously decided to abstain from telemarketing regarding donations at any time. Finally, our donor database is our best kept secret, and we will never share this data with anyone else."

ADRA does strongly rely on donations and is grateful for the many thousands of people who donate or fund raise in a variety of ways. They will accept kind donations online or if you call them you can even donate by telephone but, continued Smit, "Donations need to come from the heart and ultimately exemplify Christ's command to help our neighbour."

For more information on the world of ADRA contact them directly on 01923 681723 or via their website: www.adra.org.uk.

friends with themselves and the truth about the dating game.

In the middle of the week they entered into the difficult world of break up. Just how do you split with a partner? As part of the course the young people had to write a fictitious letter to end a relationship. The next day they shared their letter with the group. Course leader, Colin Woodford stated, "these letters were amazing and it proved just how seriously the young people took the seminar."

Other topics covered were, 'How to tell if you are really in love', and 'Touchy situations – how far is too far?' On the final day the seminar looked at 'Close encounters of a dangerous kind (STDs)' and 'How to remain sexually abstinent'.

The programme was based on the materials from Nancy Van Pelt and it is hoped that following this seminar, it will help these young people make the right decisions for their future when dating. 'Smart Love' is part of the Children's Ministries department programme of the North England Conference.
