The mention of it evokes images of adventure and excitement, of goods and services fulfilling the necessities of everyday life. And as more people are seeking a blend of theoretical and practical education, it provides a challenging answer to students from many walks of life.

Business is center stage in this issue of FOCUS. Featured is the creation of the School of Business—its faculty, programs, and, most important, its alumni. From merchants and manufacturers to executives in international conglomerates, Andrews business graduates are active in a wide variety of professional endeavors. They lend expertise to administering health care institutions, directing manufacturing and distributing concerns, and assisting many church and community agencies with their financial and management operations.

Also contained in this issue is Dr. Smoot's annual report of institutional progress, financial highlights prepared by Vice President for Financial Administration Vernon Siver, an update of advancement of the Capital Fund 1985 campaign, and recognition of the many donors who, with their steadfast support, help make it all possible.

Through these and other presentations, we continue to point to the university's striving for a higher standard—in all of its academic, social and ethical endeavors.

The goal of excellence is indeed high, but so is the enthusiasm of students, faculty, alumni, parents and friends who are dedicated to the fulfillment of Andrews University's mission both on campus and in their individual lives.

United in this common purpose, that goal becomes attainable.

In This Issue

We introduce the work of new members joining the FOCUS staff.

Mark Driskill, a communication graduate of Southern Missionary College in Tennessee, is news editor, coordinating coverage of campus activities in the University Update section.

Becky Frost, who recently was named to this institution's first communication intern post jointly sponsored by Andrews and the General Conference Communication Department, contributes full-length articles and other material in her role as feature editor.

Also assisting, as news reporters, are Bill Knott, who worked in the Atlantic Union College public relations office while earning a degree in English, and Don Jehle, who was active as student newspaper editor, campus radio station announcer and yearbook photographer while earning a degree in communication from Southern Missionary College. Before entering the Theological Seminary at Andrews this fall for advanced training, Bill spent a year as an assistant pastor in Massachusetts, and Don served for a year as photographer and graphic artist for the Review and Herald Publishing Association in Washington, D.C. and then as an assistant pastor and literature evangelist in Virginia.

Brian Rendel, a business major who recently graduated from Cedar Lake Academy where he served as senior class president, joins photographers Jeffrey Johnston and Dave Sherwin to provide professional-quality visuals throughout. Jeane Robinson continues as alumni editor, and welcomes continued submissions from readers.

Of course, no listing would be complete without mention of Jeanne Hartwell and Rebecca May who, working behind the scenes, render typing and editorial services in addition to an extra measure of objectivity and encouragement as we prepare each issue.

Taken together, this creative group combines their talents to bring you a view of Andrews University each quarter. Drop us a card or letter and let us know how we're doing—we'd love to hear from you.

Correction

FOCUS inadvertently omitted the fact that Ivan T. Blazen, mentioned in the Fall 1980 issue as having been named chairman of the New Testament department in the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary, received his PhD degree from Princeton Theological Seminary. He has also studied at Union Theological Seminary, the University of Heidelberg in Germany and Drew University.

Crisis Hotline Service Begun

A crisis-intervention telephone "hotline" began service on Nov. 4 at Andrews.

The service, named "Open Ear Hotline," is operated by Andrews Christian Youth in Action (ACYA) and is staffed by trained lay counselors, most of whom are Andrews students in social work, ministry or health-related fields.

It operates from 6 p.m. until 6 a.m. seven nights a week. Phil Hieger, sophomore social work student and director of "Open Ear," explains the reason for the evening hours: "This is when most people experience depression and loneliness."

The counselors provide guidance within a Christian framework. They have been instructed in methods of concerned listening and are trained not to impose their own value systems on callers. Training sessions for counselors were conducted by Antoinette Williams, a 1979 Andrews graduate in social work.

The "hot line" serves the Berrien Springs area and outlying communities.

Nursing Professor Wins Seven Medals

"I try to follow the eight natural laws of health, and I feel it has paid off for me," says Charlotte Hamlin, winner of seven medals in the Senior Olympics held in Springfield, Ill., in September. The 62-year-old Mrs. Hamlin, assistant professor of nursing, attributed her winning to a daily health program.

"If more people would do this, they would have better health. The closer we harmonize our lifestyle with the basic laws of nature, the more likely we are to attain high levels of health and vitality," she said.

"I believe that man was originally created by God to live a long, healthy life," said Mrs. Hamlin. "God has shown us how to make this a reality, scientifically. If we cooperate, good health can be ours relatively easily."

Many sports were included in the Senior Olympics: golf, bowling, swimming, badminton, tennis, bicycle racing and track and field events.

Competing against more than 600 participants, Mrs. Hamlin, in the 60-to-64-year age group, received gold medals in the 50-meter run, 100-meter run, standing broad jump, running broad jump and badminton. Two silver medals represent her efforts in the one-mile walk and the 200-meter run.

Mrs. Hamlin ranked second in the total number of points in her age group. Because the swimming competition was held on Saturday, she was unable to enter that event.

Ministerial Interns Affected by Changes

A ten-year training program for the church's professional ministry has been formalized, according to Dr. Thomas Blincoe, dean of the seminary.

Blincoe reports that the denomination has also voted to grant its 375 sponsored seminary students the same educational subsidies and survivor's benefits it now affords full-time employees.

In addition to a regular four-year undergraduate course, the church is recommending a combined total of four years' field experience and nine academic quarters of graduate instruction at the seminary before ordaining ministerial candidates. Efforts are under way to coordinate the curricular offerings of the seminary and the denomination's ten North American senior colleges.

The monthly stipend the church pays its sponsored students has been raised, and special provisions have been made to aid non-U.S. students who cannot be legally employed while studying in the U.S.

As one of Andrews' eight approved and accredited specialty areas, the seminary and associated programs offer students several possible degrees: master of arts in religion, master of divinity, doctor of ministry, and doctor of theology.

Record Enrollment Again This Year

Andrews has enrolled 3,018 students this fall, completing the largest registration in the school's history, according to Dr. Joseph G. Smoot, president.

"We are pleased to see Andrews continue to grow, at a time when some colleges and universities are experiencing a loss in enrollment," Smoot said. "This total of 3,018 students is an increase over last year's fall registration—also record breaking—of 2,983," he continued.

The overall enrollment this year is as follows: College of Arts and Sciences, 1,605; College of Technology, 330; School of Graduate Studies, 447; School of Business, 260 (188 undergraduates and 72 graduates); Theological Seminary, 375; and one undergraduate student is unclassified. There are 2,124 students attending Andrews on the undergraduate level and 894 on the graduate level.

Among undergraduates, the breakdown is as follows: 438 seniors, 429 juniors, 477 sophomores, 572 freshmen and 208 others.

"This is the first year for our School of Business, and we are pleased to have more than 250 students enrolled," Smoot said. The school serves as the fifth school within the structure of the university and maintains business administration degree programs on undergraduate and graduate levels.

Smoot said 24 Andrews students are involved in special work and study programs around the world while another 314 students are enrolled in programs leading to an Andrews degree offered at two affiliated SDA foreign colleges—Adventist Seminary of West Africa in Nigeria and Helderberg College in South Africa. This comes to an overall total of 3,356 students involved in educational activities related to the university

African Chief F. Olu Adetola met with Provost Roy Graham when he visited the Andrews campus in November. Adetola is chief of the Ili-shan-Remo area of West Africa, the location of the Adventist College of West Africa, affiliated with Andrews. The chief talked with several Nigerian students while here, and, according to Graham, he was "very impressed and enjoyed his visit."

this year, up from last year's total of 3,220.

According to Dr. Dwain Ford, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, several new courses of study have been added this year. A degree in fine arts is available for the first time through the art department, and a concentration in botany is offered leading to a degree. The home economics department has made available a degree in family studies with options in one of three areas: family relations, family economics and management or child development. A degree is also being offered in nutrition science for students interested in research in nutrition. Two new programs have also begun in the computer science area where students can now receive degrees in information science and computer science.

The university is also presenting evening courses which apply toward industrial and engineering technology degrees. These classes, as well as those in the School of Business, are offered during the late afternoon and evening, accommodating those with full-time employment, as well as those interested in starting a career.

Becky Frost

Esther Manestar

Andrews' continuing education series, Lifelong Learning, is presenting a full range of classes. These special courses and workshops are designed for administrators, educators, business and industrial specialists, health care and family life workers and ministers. A number of workshops for personal development are also available, such as organ design and building, creative lifestyle, beginning painting, pilot training and ground school, Chinese cooking and others. More than 90 undergraduate, graduate and noncredit courses are being offered for students interested in classes within the university environment.

Former SA President Pursues Internship

Becky Frost, a 1980 Andrews graduate, who served as student association president her junior year, has been selected by the General Conference to serve as an intern for the university's public relations department.

According to David H. Bauer, vice president for development and public relations, the two-year position is one of 12 authorized in the continental United States and is jointly sponsored by the university and the General Conference communication department.

Miss Frost will serve as feature editor of FOCUS, and assist in a wide number of public relations activities and special projects under Chris Robinson, departmental director.

She received a bachelor of arts degree in English and communication in June. An honor student all four years, she served as vice president for publications of the Adventist Intercollegiate Association her senior year. She has also been president of the English club and vice president of the Society of Andrews Scholars.

Frost participated in the Andrews European Study Tour for eleven weeks this summer to begin graduate study in English. The tour included the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Austria, and the East and West German Republics.

Miss Frost is the daughter of retired Captain and Mrs. John F. Frost, III of Springfield, Va. Before attending Andrews in the fall of 1976, she attended Nile C. Kinnick High School in Yokosuka, Japan, where Capt. Frost was stationed. Much of her education was received at various places around the world and throughout the continental United States as she has traveled with her family. Summer employment while in college included detective work for the Navy's Exchange System stationed in Norfolk, Va.

Two Killed As Plane Crashes

Two Andrews students, Esther Manestar and Tamra Schultz, were killed in a private plane crash in Haiti on August 10, according to David H. Bauer, vice president for development and public relations.

Joseph Blatchford, a former director of the Peace Corps and founding director of the Action Agency, spoke to Andrews students at an assembly just before the national election in November. Blatchford has served as deputy under-secretary of commerce and an international management consultant for the president's office. He was in Berrien Springs on behalf of the Berrien County Reagan-Bush Committee.

Miss Manestar, of St. Louis, Mo., died instantly. Miss Schultz, of Petersburg, Mich., died several hours after the crash. Ray Watkins, a former Andrews student from Montego Bay, Jamaica, was admitted to a Daytona Beach, Fla., hospital for burn treatments. He has since been released.

The plane crashed 30 miles northwest of Port-au-Prince, Haiti, into the side of a mountain.

Paul Jensen, the pilot, and Debbie Mahoy, both residents of Florida, were also seriously injured in the crash. They were admitted to the Gainsville Burn Center in Florida and have also been released.

Douglas Lectures at Howard University

Dr. Walter B. T. Douglas, professor of church history and history of religions at the seminary, presented a series of lectures at Howard University Oct. 18 and 19. Douglas spoke at Howard as a guest for the Andrew Rankin Lecture Series, which invites professors from universities throughout the country to speak on current topics.

Douglas' topic was "The Church in the Contemporary World—Challenge and Response."

A native of the West Indies, Douglas has had extensive pastoral experience both in North America and the Caribbean. He has taught at Caribbean Union College and McMaster University in Canada.

Douglas received his bachelor of arts, master of arts and bachelor of divinity degrees from Andrews, a master of sacred theology from McGill University in Canada, and a PhD from McMaster University. He was named to Who's Who in Religion in America in 1975 and as an Outstanding Young Man in America in 1974.

Douglas is the author of a number of scholarly magazine articles and is currently authoring a book entitled "Sanctity and Secularity," which is an examination of Christian faith and belief in contemporary society.

He was the organizer of the LaRue Circle, an academic group which meets monthly to discuss missions and comparative religions throughout the world.

Former Graduate Dean Dies

Dr. Emil Leffler, retired dean of the Andrews University School of Graduate Studies, died in Berrien Springs Nov. 14 at age 81.

A native of New York City, Leffler's career spanned 47 years of service to educational institutions, several operated by the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

He served for eight years at Broadview College in Illinois as professor, registrar, director of admissions and director of the summer school; 10 years at Battle Creek College on the faculty and as president; 21 years at Albion College in Michigan as dean; and eight years at Andrews University as dean of the School of Graduate Studies.

Leffler received an associate of arts degree from Atlantic Union College, a bachelor's from Columbia Union College, a master's from Columbia University, and two honorary doctorates—in science from the Detroit Institute of Technology and in law from Battle Creek College. He pursued further academic training at the University of Chicago and the University of Michigan.

He served on a number of state and national committees, including such groups as the YMCA and the Consumer Credit Industry, and was active in Delta Sigma Rho, Pi Kappa Delta, Phi Eta Sigma, Omicron Delta Kappa, Phi Mu Alpha-Sinfonia and Delta Mu Delta.

Leffler was president of numerous organizations such as the Michigan Colleges Association, the North Central Association of College Deans, the Michigan Association of Collegiate Registrars, Michigan Division of Higher Education and the Michigan Educational Association.

Emil Leffler

He was also active as coordinator for the Midwest Conference of Academic Deans, the Michigan Association of Church-related Colleges, the Michigan Consumer Finance Conference and chairman of the Michigan Council on Economic Education.

Leffler held membership in numerous professional associations encompassing interests in history, finance, economics, human relations and education.

He retired in 1968 and was named Dean Emeritus of the School of Graduate Studies by the university's Board of Trustees in 1969.

Commenting on Dr. Leffler's death, Andrews University President Joseph G. Smoot said: "Emil Leffler had a long and distinguished educational career. His experience and wise counsel were effective in helping Andrews achieve North Central accreditation as a master's degree-granting institution in the early 1960s. His perceptive insights, kind ways and the true demeanor of a Christian gentleman endeared him to many."

Survivors include his wife, Elsie, in Berrien Springs; and two sons, Richard, in Athens, Ga. and Harold, in Niles, Mich.

Art Professor Impersonates Historical Figures

The Italian accent is a little forced, and the beard slips occasionally, but sixteenth-century Italian painter and inventor Leonardo da Vinci has everyone's attention as he lectures on his life and work in Andrews' art appreciation classes.

"Da Vinci" is one of several famous artists who was brought to life last fall in the art classes of Greg Constantine, professor and chairman of the art department. Drawing on a broad knowledge of each artist's life and the historical period in which he worked, Constantine wore tights, a beard and other accessories to impersonate the artists and gave a first-person account of their work.

"I had thought of impersonating famous artists in my classes many times," says Constantine. "But an article I read last summer about a science professor who used this technique successfully gave me the push I needed." In addition to the lectures given as da Vinci, Constantine lectured as Vincent Van Gogh, Pablo Picasso and Michaelangelo.

"There's certainly a lot of entertainment value for my students when I appear as one of these artists," he adds, "but I don't make anything up. All the material I present is factual. I encourage my students to probe, to ask questions about the character I'm representing. If I can help them sit up and notice a little more about the artists we're studying, I feel I've been successful."

Constantine, a member of the Andrews faculty since 1963, is a serious painter in his own right. He is best known for his technique of painting subjects as they would appear on a television screen, in a series of video dots. His works are permanently exhibited in several museums and private collections, and he has given shows in many cities, including New York and Bucharest, Romania.

He holds a master of fine arts degree from Michigan State University, and is a member of the College Art Association.

James Cox Assumes Avondale Presidency

James J. C. Cox, formerly professor of New Testament and chairman of the New Testament department at the seminary, has assumed the presidency of Avondale College, New South Wales, Australia.

A native New Zealander, Cox began his career as an evangelist in Tasmania and New Zealand. He later taught in the religion department at Columbia Union College before joining the faculty at Andrews in 1965. He also taught at Harvard University, as a teaching fellow, at the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Alexandria, Va., and as the annual professor at the William F. Albright Institute of Archaeological Research in Jerusalem, Israel.

Cox received his bachelor of arts degree from Walla Walla College, and his master of arts degree from Andrews. He pursued further graduate work in semitic studies at Johns Hopkins University and, in 1973, completed his doctorate at Harvard, graduating with distinction.

At Harvard, Cox studied in the department of the study of religion, with special emphasis on the New Testament and Christian origins. During his doctoral studies, Cox was the recipient of several fellowships, including three Harvard graduate fellowships, a Rockefeller doctoral fellowship and a Danforth teaching grant.

Greg Constantine as Leonardo da Vinci

Dr. Walter H. Lewis, botanist and professor of biology at Washington University in St. Louis, spoke at Andrews on the subject of herbs and their effect on humans. Dr. Lewis is the author of several books on botany.

Cox has served as general editor of the scholarly series, Andrews University Monographs, from 1974 to 1977, and will continue as associate editor of the journal, Andrews University Seminary Studies. He has published numerous articles in a variety of journals and dictionaries such as the Harvard Theological Review and the New International Standard Bible Encyclopedia. He has also presented papers at a number of learned societies such as the Seventh International Congress on Patristic Studies held at Oxford University in England, and the First International Congress on Coptology conducted by the Societe de Geographie in Cairo, Egypt.

Cox is a member of the Society of Biblical Literature and the American Schools of Oriental Research.

He is married to the former Y. Alice Cameron, who served as manager of the Andrews University Bookstore from 1968 to 1979. Their son, John, is a professional photographer residing in New York.

Avondale is affiliated with Pacific Union College on the undergraduate level and with Andrews for graduate studies.

As Cox was leaving Andrews, he was awarded the John Nevins Andrews Medallion. The medallion is given by the university recognizing significant achievement in the advancement of knowledge and education. Award is made on the basis of excellence in teaching, meaningful research and the publication of research findings.

The medallion is reserved primarily for alumni, faculty members, or those who may have a special relationship to the university. Selections are made by the award committee composed of administrators and faculty.

The award commemorates the sesquicentennial of the birth of John Nevins Andrews in 1829. In 1960, Andrews University was named for him.

Blythe Owen Wins Another Award

Dr. Blythe Owen, professor of music at Andrews, has been named "Michigan Composer of the Year" by the Michigan Music Teachers' Association (MMTA). The eighty-one year old composer-in-residence recently produced a composition under contract for the MMTA which will be vying for top honors in the country when the National Music Teachers' Association meets in the spring.

"The award came as a surprise to me," Dr. Owen says. "I didn't have any idea that my work was being considered, but I'm delighted with the honor." Though this is the first time she has been selected for top state honors by the MMTA, she is no stranger to awards. Her compositions have won numerous local, national and international prizes, and have had many performances at music festivals, universities and churches, as well as on radio.

Dr. Owen's compositions were also recently the subject of a doctoral dissertation by Alfendy Mamora, a 1970 Master of Music graduate of Andrews who completed a doctorate at New York University. Mamora's dissertation dealt specifically with Dr. Owen's major sacred choral works, most of which have been composed during the last three decades of her career.

"It's very unusual for a doctoral dissertation to be written about a living composer," says Dr. Paul Hamel, chairman of Andrews' music department. "We're delighted that this honor has come to someone who richly deserves it."

There is another side to Blythe Owen, a less-public world than that of award-winning compositions and premiere performances. Besides teaching a full complement of classes, she also makes time for between 25 and 30 private lessons a week in her home, many of them to school-children who have little idea of the national reputation of their teacher. Spending long hours with tiny fingers and elementary scales might irritate many others, but not Blythe Owen.

"I think it's vital to help children learn to love music at an early age," she says. "Watching them learn is an exciting process for me, too. And besides," she adds smiling, "they're so cute! Some of them can barely span five keys on the piano, but they're trying, and that's the most important thing."

Dr. Owen joined the Andrews faculty in 1965, having previously taught at Walla Walla College, Northwestern University, the Cosopolitan School of Music in Chicago and Roosevelt University. She is listed in Who's Who in the Midwest, the International Dictionary of Musicians, and the first edition of Who's Who in American Women.

Foreign Student Advisor Presents Report

Ken Blanton, Andrews' faculty advisor for foreign students, presented an in-depth study report at the Region V National Association for Foreign Student Affairs convention in Detroit, Nov. 6 and 7. His report was a follow-up of a presentation given at the national NAFSA convention in May.

Blanton's presentation, "International Student Advising—The One-Person Office: Some Suggestions for Extending Effectiveness," focused on the unique needs and difficulties of advisory personnel working alone on college and university campuses.

"This is a new type of approach," says Blanton. "Most regional conventions of this type cater to the needs of the multiperson international student staff on the large public and private campuses. There is a great demand for information and material that will help those who must work alone or with a limited staff in doing this critical work."

Blanton's responsibilities include supervising the legal status of more than 550 international students now enrolled at Andrews. Changes in government immigration laws, work restrictions, and student and exchange visa requirements must be communicated to these students on a continuing basis for them to maintain their student status in the country, Blanton said.

Blanton joined the university staff in 1974. He holds a master's from Andrews, and is currently completing requirements for the doctor of education degree here.

Edith Schaeffer Speaks at Family Life Workshop

Edith Schaeffer, author of eight books on Christianity and the family, was a major speaker for the sixth annual Family Life Workshop held at Andrews in September. The workshop was sponsored by the General Conference and was designed to inspire and equip participants in meeting the needs of their own families as well as reaching out to others in a family-centered ministry.

Mrs. Schaeffer, speaking to more than 400 people at Andrews Academy Auditorium one evening during the workshop, told of experiences she has shared with her husband over the past twenty-five years. As co-founders of the L'Abri Fellowship in Switzerland, the Schaeffers have helped several thousand young people discover the importance of implementing Christian values into a family relationship.

"Christian values don't just happen in a family," Mrs. Schaeffer said. "It takes work and patience and a willingness to let the Holy Spirit work in the life of a family."

She has written such books as "L'Abri," "What is a Family?" "Hidden Art," "Affliction," and "A Way of Seeing." Her husband, Dr. Francis Schaeffer, has produced films dealing with Western history and Christian ethics.

Together the Schaeffers have completed two film series, "How Should We Then Live?" and "Whatever Happened to the Human Race?"

John B. Youngberg, associate professor of religious education and director of the seminar, said the workshop was designed to train teams in concepts and methods of organizing a church-centered family life program. "The goal of the seminar," Youngberg said, "was to give volunteer workers and pastoral couples Biblical insights and practical 'how to' methods for developing family-based ministries in their own homes and to extend this to others as family evangelism."

Speaking of the problems in today's families was Youngberg's wife, Millie, associate professor of education and co-director of the seminar. "The family today is in great need of support. Because of this need we want to help others," Dr. Youngberg said.

The seminar sponsored several other speakers including Karen Burton Mains. Mrs. Mains spoke of her Christian ministry as a homemaker and hostess. While working with her husband, David, in Chicago's Full Circle Church Fellowship, Mrs. Mains developed her successful system of "hospitality evangelism" for sharing the gospel. Out of these experiences grew her best-selling book, "Open Heart-Open Home."

More than 130 people participated in the seminar held over a ten-day period.

The Family Life Workshop was held as a part of Andrews' Life-long Learning continuing education program.

Staff Member Dies Suddenly

Dorothy Van Duinen, 52, assistant director of the Teaching Materials Center in the James White Memorial Library at Andrews, died Nov. 13, after a short illness. Mrs. Van Duinen was the wife of Donald Van Duinen, principal of the Ruth Murdoch Elementary School at Andrews. The Van Duinens have lived in the Berrien Springs area since 1956.

"Dorothy Van Duinen contributed greatly to the well-being of the university community," remarked Andrews President Joseph G. Smoot. "Beloved by children in the Ruth Murdoch Elementary School, she developed a strong library there. More recently, her work in the Teaching Materials Center made that a respected department of the James White Library. Above all, Dorothy's happy, outgoing personality meant a lot to those who knew and loved her."

Mrs. Van Duinen was born in Orlando, Fla., on January 19, 1928. She was a graduate of Battle Creek Academy in 1946 and received a two-year teaching certificate from Andrews in elementary education in 1953. In 1974 she received a bachelor's degree from Andrews in elementary education with a double major in art and science. She taught at the Kalamazoo Junior Academy from 1953 to 1956. After moving to Berrien Springs, she taught at the Berrien Springs church school from 1956 to 1957. She was the librarian at the Ruth Murdoch Elementary School from 1968 through 1977 when she assumed her most recent position at the Andrews library.

The funeral was held at Pioneer Memorial Church and burial was in the Oak Hill cemetery in Grand Rapids.

She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Judy; two sons, Keith and Loren; all of Berrien Springs; her mother, Mrs. Ruth Hammond of Battle Creek; two foster sisters, Marion Nimback, of Detroit and Mary Ealy of Kalamazoo.

The family asks that memorials be made to the worthy student fund at Ruth Murdoch Elementary School.

Faculty Receive Advanced Degrees

Two Andrews' faculty members have completed work on advanced degrees, according to Dr. Roy Graham, university provost.

Raymond Leadbetter

Dr. Raymond Leadbetter, associate professor of English, was awarded a doctorate in English literature by Indiana University at Bloomington. Leadbetter joined the school's faculty in 1967.

Born in Mission City, British Columbia, Canada, Leadbetter has completed two degrees at Walla Walla College, a bachelor of arts in education and history in 1958 and a master of arts in education three years later. In 1968 he received a master of arts in English from Andrews.

While teaching English, journalism, speech, history and Bible at Auburn Academy in Washington, from 1958 to 1966, he spent four years as public relations director for the academy and was also active in area civil defense work.

Leadbetter is a member of the Modern Language Association of America.

Dr. Kermit L. Netteburg, assistant professor of journalism, received his doctorate from Minnesota University. Netteburg's doctoral dissertation was entitled "Cameras in the Courtroom: Is a Picture Worth a Thousand Words?"

Born in San Jose, Calif., he received his bachelor of arts degree in business administration from Union College in 1967. Four years later, he earned his master's degree in journalism from Colorado University, Boulder, Col.

Netteburg has served as a teacher at Campion Academy and as business manager for Oak Park Academy, Nevada, Iowa, for two years before joining the Andrews faculty in 1973.

Wittschiebe Speaks For Week of Prayer

Dr. Charles E. Wittschiebe, former professor of pastoral care at Andrews, was the featured speaker for the fall week of spiritual emphasis held October 20 to 25 on campus. Dr. Wittschiebe retired from Andrews in 1974. Born in New York City, he graduated from Atlantic Union College in 1931 and received an honorary doctor of divinity degree from Andrews in 1964.

Dr. Wittschiebe has taught such courses as Marriage and the Family, The Church and Social Problems and Marriage Counseling. He has also conducted seminars in pastoral psychology and counseling for many groups, and his speaking engagements have called him to Canada, Central America, Australia and New Zealand. He spent one year of clinical pastoral training at St. Elizabeths Hospital and the National Training School for Boys (both in Washington, D.C.), and initiated an introduction to clinical pastoral training. He has written articles for several denominational magazines and is the author of the book God Invented Sex.

Architecture Professor Brings World View To Department

Dr. Neville H. Clouten has been appointed professor and new chairman of the department of architecture. Clouten was formerly senior lecturer in architecture at the University of Newcastle, New South Wales, Australia, since 1969.

A native of Australia, Clouten began his career as an architect in Stockholm, Sweden. He later did research in architecture at Edinburgh University in Scotland where he received his doctoral degree.

Clouten received his bachelor of architecture degree from the University of Sydney, N.S.W., Australia, and his master of architecture degree from Ohio University, Columbus, where he studied architectural history and photogrammetry.

While at Edinburgh, he used a unique method of stereoscopic projections of architectural spaces for research in visual perception. A teaching method has developed as a result of these studies.

After obtaining a stereoscopic pair of photographs from a building location, Clouten projects them onto a screen using two slide projectors. One picture reflects a slightly different angle of the building than the other. The result is that the mind reconstructs a three-dimensional quality of space which assists in capturing the feeling of the real building.

"This method brings the essence of what a building is like into the architecture laboratory and analyzes it in simulated three-dimensional rather than two-dimensional conditions," he said.

Clouten has published numerous articles in a variety of architectural journals and is a fellow in the Royal Australian Institute of Architects and a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects, the Architect's Accreditation Council of Australia, and a former member of the Newcastle Gallery Society Committee and the assessing panel for design awards, Australia.

He is married to the former Norene May Rippon, also of Australia. They have two children.

Education Department Reaccredited

The National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education has granted a seven-year reaccreditation to Andrews as a training institution for teachers and professional school personnel, according to President Joseph G. Smoot.

"This renewed accreditation is the maximum approval the council gives," Smoot said. "It is very important for Andrews to meet these high standards so that both students and potential employers know what a degree from Andrews means."

In 1970, Andrews received its first accreditation for the undergraduate education and master of arts in teaching degree programs. Four years later the graduate programs for elementary and secondary school principals and guidance counselors were approved by the council.

As one of Andrews' eight nationally-accredited programs, the education department offers an undergraduate degree in education and graduate level degrees in educational counseling and psychology, administration, foundations and measurement, as well as curriculum, instruction and supervision.

"We recognize and appreciate the important contributions of the classroom teacher, school principals and superintendents in the area who have cooperated with our teacher training program. They have helped keep our standards high," Smoot said.

This 32-foot-tall mechanical structure, called the "human yo-yo" by some, was created by Dr. Victor Bigford, a senior art major. Bigford, who classifies himself as a perpetual student, hopes to someday teach art on the college level. He says the kinetic sculpture took nearly 250 hours of his time and cost almost $1300 to build. The sculpture was opened to riders to coincide with Bigford's indoor senior art show in the Art department which opened November 23.

LPN Program Now Being Offered

Andrews' College of Technology now offers a licensed practical nursing (LPN) program jointly sponsored with Hinsdale Hospital, according to Stephen Young, director of occupational education at the university.

The 12-month program is based on approximately 2,000 hours of practical training, says Young. All instruction is received off-campus in connection with the hospital.

"Job opportunities for LPNs are good all over the country," Young said. LPNs are often the hospital personnel in the most direct contact with patients. This is exciting work."

The merger offers students standardized credit from an accredited university. LPN students now reap the benefits that all Andrews students receive. In addition, this training can be used as a base for furthering one's education in the field if so desired.

"We have 36 students currently enrolled in this program," said Young. "That proves that there is a need for this type of educational opportunity in our curriculum."

Soviet Dissident Speaks on Campus

"The dissident movement in Russia is much more widespread than Americans realize," Alexander Ginzburg, a recent Soviet exile said as he spoke to a student assembly in Johnson Auditorium Thursday, Oct. 9.

Speaking through an interpreter, the exiled journalist said the simplicity of the idea of human rights has kept it alive and growing in Russia, even though the government routinely imprisons and deports those who speak out.

Born in Moscow, Ginzburg, 43, has been active in the human rights movement in the USSR since its very inception. Opposition to the government's repressive policies brought him three severe jail terms and nine years of imprisonment before finally being stripped of his citizenship and exiled to the west.

In 1979, Ginzburg and four other dissidents were exchanged for two convicted Soviet spies. Up to this point there had been no record of a transaction in which Soviet citizens were traded for Soviet citizens and an American prisoner was not involved.

Ginzburg painted a picture of a Russian populace eager for religious books, and of "underground" churches that do not follow the stifling rules that state-approved churches are forced to adhere to.

Religious groups now provide the main support for the civil rights movement, he said, although other groups, such as workers, are taking part.

Ginzburg spoke of the accomplishments of Vladimir Shchelkv, an Adventist activist in Russia who died this spring in a work camp at age 84.

Shchelkv, he said, established the first underground printing press in the country, and was responsible for printing a series of books which today are the basic textbooks of the human rights movement in Russia.

It is important to remember, he said, that a nation where a 40-year reign of terror wiped out between one-fourth and one-third of the population, "had a tremendous number of victims, but also a great number of executions."

During his 20 years of involvement in the human rights movement, Ginzburg said he never saw a time when it grew weaker.

One overriding principle of the dissidents in the Soviet Union, Ginzburg said, is a commitment to non-violence.

"I come from a country that has been created in terror, and I don't advise anyone to live by such means," he said.

Ginzburg today devotes much of his time in helping the Russian Social Fund, organized in Switzerland by Nobel Prize-winning Russian author Alexander Solzhenitsyn to help political prisoners in the Soviet Union.

Seminary Professors Present Papers

Lawrence T. Geraty, professor of archaeology and history of antiquity and William H. Shea, associate professor of Old Testament, both of the theological seminary, presented scholarly papers at the annual meeting of the Society of Biblical Literature and American Academy of Religion in Dallas, Nov. 5 to 9.

Geraty chaired a symposium designed to review the results of American archaeology in Jordan and their implications for biblical studies. Geraty himself presented a paper surveying the history of archaeological exploration in that area.

Geraty received his doctorate from Harvard University, and participated in three archaeological "digs" while completing his graduate work. He has also participated in all five of the archaeological digs which Andrews has sponsored at Heshbon, Jordan. He joined the faculty in 1966.

Shea presented the results of his study of two geographical lists found at the site of Ebla in ancient Syria. One of these mentions the biblical city of Sodom, he believes. Shea holds a doctorate in Ancient Near Eastern Studies from the University of Michigan, and a medical degree from Loma Linda. He served as a physician in Nicaragua, Trinidad, Massachusetts, and California before coming to Andrews in 1972.

The Society of Biblical Literature, founded in 1880, is one of the most prestigious societies for scholars and teachers in biblical studies. Geraty and Shea joined with other scholars of the American Schools of Oriental Research to celebrate the society's one hundredth anniversary at the convention.

Tyrrell Appointed New Security Chief

Dale S. Tyrrell has been appointed director of the university's security force, according to Dr. Reger Smith, vice president for student affairs. Tyrrell replaces Donald Candy, who accepted a position with an Elkhart, Ind., firm in September after 14 years at Andrews.

The 49-year-old Tyrrell is a former policeman, having served eight years on the police force of Groton, New York, where he rose to the rank of acting chief. He has also worked as a plant foreman and manager for manufacturing companies in New York, Michigan, and Iowa.

Tyrrell directs a combined force of 13 patrolmen and is responsible for coordinating security, safety and traffic arrangements. He also serves as the university's liaison to the Berrien Springs-Oronoko Township police force.

The new security director was born in Milwaukee, Wis., and grew up in central New York state. He graduated from high school in McLean, N.Y., and began work in a manufacturing company. In addition to eight years of police duty, he has worked as a book salesman, plant foreman, and most recently, as plant manager for the Nordic Drop Forge Company in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

"I'm glad for the opportunity to work for an institution I strongly believe in," says Tyrrell, noting that two of his children have attended Andrews. "I want to help shape the university's security force as a helpful and effective service to the campus and the community."

Tyrrell is married to the former Sandra Albertson.

WAUS Expands To Fill New Roles

Two significant developments affecting WAUS-FM may result in a major expansion program at the university-owned radio station, according to station manager Allen Steele.

On September 9, the Berrien Broadcasting Corporation, a recently incorporated organization, submitted an application to the Federal Communications Commission for license to operate a new AM radio station in Berrien Springs. The corporation announced that it has asked the management of WAUS to serve as advisor to the board of directors and to operate the new station for the group.

Robert H. Carter, president of the Lake Union Conference, is president of the new corporation. Orlando A. Mastrapa, assistant professor of Spanish at Andrews, is secretary. Other members of the board of directors are: Joseph G. Smoot, Andrews' president; Charles D. Joseph, president of the Lake Region Conference; Elias G. Gomez, associate director of the office of human relations at the General Conference; Richard L. Huff, vice president and general counsel at Andrews; and Vernon H. Siver, vice president for financial affairs at the university.

If a license is granted, the non-directional, full-time station would have a power of 500 watts day and 250 watts night.

The mostly-music format of the station would include segments for Spanish-speaking and black audiences. French, German and other foreign-language music may be aired. English segments will mainly feature religious music, public affairs programs and news.

Also, WAUS was notified October 23 that its production studio has won a contract with National Public Radio to serve as the national distributor for educational media packages.

WAUS's Studio 91 will receive materials from NPR for duplication and nationwide distribution. A formal contract with NPR will be signed when Studio 91 has completed preparation of its facilities for increased activity.

Two officials from NPR's Educational Division toured the studio on November 7. Dr. Brian Brightly, director of educational services, and Marcia Witten, administrative assistant for NPR's "Options in Education" program, met with WAUS and Studio 91 officers to discuss terms of the agreement.

The NPR contract is expected to double the size of the Studio 91 operation and will require additional space for storage, production, and distribution facilities. There will be new student employment possibilities at the studio as a result of the contract. As many as 15 part-time employees may be hired to handle the increased work load.

NPR materials that will be duplicated and distributed by Studio 91 are designed specifically for use at educational institutions, and include both printed and recorded materials to be used alongside traditional classroom instruction.

This project is the forerunner of a larger NPR plan to offer college classes for credit over the air, and to become an international distributor of college-level broadcast education.

Dudley Wins Author's Award

Dr. Roger L. Dudley, assistant professor of church ministry at the seminary, has won an award in the Review and Herald Publishing Association's Author Award Program for his manuscript entitled Counseling Young People—A Guide for Non-Professional Counselors.

Out of a total of 161 evaluated manuscripts, six were awarded prizes. Dudley's book took first place and a $1,000 award in the Health and Home section of the contest.

The book has a non-technical approach, taking a look at different dimensions of youth counseling while illustrating them with actual experiences. All professional advice is boiled down to layman's terms so that these practices can be easily understood. Emphasized are how to build relationships with youth for counseling as well as how to relay decision-making and awareness skills to them.

Dudley is the author of Why Teenagers Reject Religion and What To Do About It and co-author with his wife, Peggy, Married and Glad Of It.

$2.5 Million Loan Granted For Retirement Units

University Retirement Centers, Inc., in co-operation with Andrews, has received a Department of Housing and Urban Development loan for the amount of $2,462,700 for construction of housing for elderly and handicapped persons, according to Vernon H. Siver, vice president for financial administration. Announcement of the loan was made September 5 by U.S. Sen. Carl Levin, of Michigan, and U.S. Rep. David Stockman, of St. Joseph.

"Application was made in March for a low-interest loan of $3,348,000 in order to build up to 83 housing units on 10 acres of land northeast of the campus," Siver said. "The land is owned by the university and is presently being used as agricultural property."

Siver said that Andrews is serving as the sponsoring organization for the effort. The housing will qualify for rent subsidies, Siver said, and will be available to those who qualify.

Seminary Student Killed in Crash

Jeffrey L. Yeagley, 22, a first-year student in the seminary here, was killed Oct. 14, in a car accident near Berrien Springs. Born in Pittsburgh, Penn., he graduated from Atlantic Union College in 1979 with a bachelor of arts degree in theology and English, and had worked as a pastor for a year in Corning, N.Y.

Yeagley's parents, Elder and Mrs. L. R. Yeagley, are residents of Battle Creek, Mich., where Elder Yeagley is chaplain at Battle Creek Sanitarium Hospital. A brother, Bryan, is a sophomore at Andrews. Two other brothers, Stephen and David, reside in Battle Creek.

Yeagley had been an active member of many organizations while in college, participating in band, choir and the brass ensemble, as well as holding the positions of president of his sophomore, junior and senior classes. He was listed among Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities in 1979 and was included on the dean's list for seven semesters prior to his graduation.

Memorial services were held at Andrews and AUC and the funeral and interment were in Battle Creek.

Greene Wins October Footrace

The third annual Thaddeus T. Thudpucker Punkin' Run was notable because of a shortened name and a longer race.

Simply called the Punkin' Run, this year's event featured a half-marathon of 13.1 miles starting near Johnson Gym on the campus, in October.

Kenneth Greene, a junior, came in first place. This year's event was the longest in the race's three-year history, and brought 47 runners out to brave weather in the 40s. Greene had a time of one hour, 14 minutes, 24 seconds. Next was Greg Parrett, with a time of 1:14:30, and Mike Pionkowski came in third with a time of 1:16:07.

The first woman to finish the race was Debra Silver, coming in thirty-ninth overall, with a time of 1:44:49.

The half-marathon was not the only race of the day, however. Preceding it was a 1.5 mile fun run and a 4.2 miler. Michael Wellington came in first in the fun run and Rod Goodchild of nearby Lake Michigan College was winner of the 4.2 mile race. Leena Mammen came in as the first woman runner in the shorter race in which 118 runners participated.

One of the more interesting entries in the half-marathon was 55-year-old Montie Cudd. Cudd ran pulling a rickshaw as his dog jogged alongside him. With a time of one hour, 49 minutes, 18 seconds, Cudd believes he set a new world's record for running a half-marathon race with a rickshaw. He has been running for three and a half years, one of those years running with his rickshaw.

Mental Health Workshop Sponsored By ASDAN

A workshop on the view of mental health care in the SDA church was conducted Oct. 10 to 12 by Dr. Lois Eggers, clinical psychologist.

The workshop, open to the public, was presented by the Southwestern Michigan Chapter of the Association of Seventh-day Adventist Nurses (ASDAN), and was designed for health care personnel, teachers and ministers.

Topics included non-Christian versus Christian schools of psychological thought, use of the will, self-help adjustment programs, habits and safe and dangerous mind sciences.

Eggers has worked as a woman's correctional supervisor, a correctional counselor, a private counselor, and as an elementary and secondary school teacher. She presently serves as a licensed marriage, family and child counselor at a California state penal institution. In addition to counseling, she evaluates convicted felons for appropriate probation and transfer programs.

Preaching, Worship Consultation Held

James W. Cox, Ronald E. Sleeth and James F. White, nationally renowned authorities on preaching and worship, were featured speakers at the first annual Consultation on Preaching and Worship held at Andrews Nov. 3-7.

"Clergy and lay leaders of all faiths were invited to participate in the consultation to renew and further their ministry skills in preaching and worship," said Steven P. Vitrano, chairman of the department of church and ministry at the seminary and coordinator for the program. "This was also the first week of an intensive, three-week, 'Word and Worship' seminar for pastors taking the doctor of ministry degree here."

Robert Bruce Pierce, pastor of the Chicago Temple, First United Methodist Church, spoke at a Friday evening worship in the Pioneer Memorial Church on campus. This celebration service, the culmination of the week, was open to the public.

Each day's program began with a lecture and discussion session. Vitrano conducted the orientation session on Monday. Tuesday morning Sleeth explored the communication problems encountered in proclaiming the Christian faith. Sleeth, a graduate of Northwestern University, is author of the books, "Persuasive Preaching," "Proclaiming the Word" and "Look Who's Talking." He is presently professor of preaching at Garrett-Evangelical Theological Seminary.

On Wednesday, Cox, professor of Christian preaching at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, discussed principles of biblical preaching. Cox is a former editor of "The Twentieth Century Pulpit" and has authored "A Guide to Biblical Preaching" and "Surprised by God."

James F. White, professor of Christian worship at Perkins School of Theology, spoke on his specialty, Christian worship, on Thursday morning. White has also authored many books, including the recent Introduction to Christian Worship and New Forms of Worship.

A symposium and panel discussion on music and worship was conducted by members of the Andrews music faculty Friday morning.

Reading Methods Workshop Held

A workshop in reading methods was conducted at Andrews Sept. 15-18, by Louise Moon, assistant director of the university's reading center.

Open to the public, the workshop was of particular value to parents, classroom teachers, reading consultants and those interested in helping children or adults master the reading process.

The workshop's emphasis was on the AVT decoding reading method—a multi-sensory linguistic approach to reading, which has been used in classrooms for the past five years. The technique uses a sound-symbol blending process, cited in the July-August 1980 "Educational Researcher" magazine as having a "significantly greater impact on reading than the other experimental treatments."

Assisting Moon with the workshop was Shirani deAlwis, instructor of reading and a doctoral student at Andrews, and Frank Lang, who developed the AVT method.

Sophomore Student Dies After Accident

Deborah J. Dilley, 19, an Andrews sophomore, died Nov. 19 as a result of injuries she received a day earlier in a car-truck collision near the campus.

Miss Dilley was a life-long resident of Berrien Springs and was majoring in communicative disorders at the time of her death. She attended the Mars Elementary School in Berrien Springs and the Berrien Springs High School where she was a member of the German Club and the Spanish Club and ranked in the top third of her senior class, graduating in 1979.

Survivors include her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Morris U. Dilley; a sister, Kim; and a grandmother, Mrs. Ethyl Dilley, all of Berrien Springs. The funeral was held in Niles, Mich., and she was buried in Berrien Springs.

Unique Program Captures Attention, National Award

Andrews has received a grant of $25,000 for the expansion of an educational children's program called "The Radio Adventures of Captain Magic." The university is one of three winners in the first Metropolitan Life Foundation Awards in Nutrition program.

The program was pilot-tested on a small scale with 103 second graders in the winter and spring of 1980 in the South Bend (Indiana) School Corporation. Captain Magic is a locally invented good-food hero who came into five experimental classrooms via FM radio, teaching lessons about good food and healthful eating habits.

Martha A. Erickson, coordinator of nutrition education for the South Bend Community School Corporation, created Captain Magic, and original scripts were written by Wendy Bognar, an elementary school teacher with a background in advertising and marketing. Mrs. Erickson, who holds a master of science in education from Purdue University, involved co-workers, friends and family in the program's development. It was tested with students in five separate schools in Indiana.

More than 22 Michigan and Indiana school districts have made a commitment to adopt the program. WAUS-FM, the university's public educational radio station, will be coordinating and airing the program. According to President Joseph G. Smoot, this was a classical case of a successful idea that was developed into an award-winning product. "With the help of the Metropolitan Life Foundation, the schoolchildren of the Michiana area will be introduced to nutrition education that has proven to increase nutritional awareness an average of 25 percent," Smoot said.

Under the Awards in Nutrition program, the Metropolitan Life Foundation is contributing a total of $225,000 over three years to nine educational institutions for innovative, potentially replicable programs in nutrition. The awards are being made for proposals in three specific areas: food and nutrition education in the elementary schools, nutrition education in medical schools and education programs for developing food and nutrition skills for the aged. Andrews received the award in the first category.

Grants were also awarded this year to Pennsylvania State University and the University of Pennsylvania as part of the program. The three schools to receive the grants were among more than 100 of the nation's largest and most prestigious educational institutions to present proposals to Metropolitan Life.

According to Dr. Patricia G. Mutch, Captain Magic program administrator and assistant professor of home economics at Andrews, the Metropolitan Life Foundation award will enable 2,100 second-graders in the Michiana area to participate in "The Radio Adventures of Captain Magic" during an expanded 16-week period. The program will also be evaluated for its impact on learning and eating habits and tested on a wide basis to show its potential for possible national distribution.

Speaking of the Awards in Nutrition grants, Arthur Sternhell, Metropolitan Life Foundation president, said, "We hope that these awards will encourage innovative programs in nutrition, a subject of increasing national importance. We are delighted not only with the Captain Magic program, but with the outstanding quality and creativity of all the entries."

President Smoot added that as an Adventist institution Andrews is committed to all types of health education. The university offers a bachelor of science in nutrition science as well as a bachelor of science in dietetics which prepares students for the qualifying examination for professional registration as a registered dietitian.

The award was presented to Smoot by Theodore Cooper, M.D., Ph.D., chairman of the judging committee for Metropolitan Life and a member of the Metropolitan Life Board of Directors. Cooper is a former provost for medical affairs at Cornell University and is now an executive vice president with the Upjohn Company in Kalamazoo, Mich.

Andrews' Bold Move into the World of Business

This year, when Andrews announced its plans to open a new School of Business, the university took a bold step to keep in itself on the cutting edge of educational advancement in the 1980s and beyond.

The new school is meeting a critical need in supplying business leaders who are well trained, not only in their professional fields, but also in the many areas of life that bear so heavily on success or failure in business. Andrews is committed to provide leaders who understand the ethics in the world of business, who value the work and dedication that inevitably go into a business success, and who are prepared to move their own profession to a higher standard of accomplishment and respect.

On the following pages, FOCUS is pleased to describe Andrews' bold move . . . a move that results in exciting new options and opportunity both for the university and its students.

A Vision of Greatness

Joseph G. Smoot

Advancement probably best describes the quality of life at Andrews University.

Whether it's measured in the personal achievement of growth in academic, social and spiritual areas, or in the fulfillment of broader institutional goals, striving for the betterment of Andrews and its community continues to be an aspect central to the existence of this school.

Excellence must be the motivating factor in an institution which seeks to live beyond the expectations of the ordinary. As John W. Gardner so eloquently said in his book, Can We Be Equal and Excellent Too?, "We need individual excellence in all its forms—in every kind of creative endeavor, in political life, in education, in industry—in short, universally . . . (Free men) must cherish what Whitehead called 'the habitual vision of greatness.' If they have the wisdom and courage to demand much of themselves—as individuals and as a society—they may look forward to long-continued vitality."

This past year has evidenced both these traits—advancement of the university's objectives in the lives of students, faculty and alumni, and progress toward a higher standard of excellence in academic areas as well as provision of necessary facilities through the Capital Fund 1985.

Perhaps the most notable event of the year has been the establishment of the School of Business as a fifth division within the university structure. This new thrust not only fulfills a long-range academic goal related to the academic master plan, it provides a framework for strengthening business programs and, thereby, offering preparation of the highest quality to entering students as well as established professionals. More details are contained elsewhere in this report.

Accreditation of the Home Economics department further strengthens the university's academic position, bringing to eight the number of specific departments recognized by their national organizations. Bachelor's and advanced degree programs in the department of education have been granted renewed accreditation to the maximum seven-year period by the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education. The institution continues to maintain 10-year accreditation through the doctoral level from the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools.

Enrollment is also on the upswing, with the number of students registered again reaching the highest level in our history. Particular growth has been experienced in the School of Graduate Studies and the College of Technology.

The university has also strengthened its outreach to the local, regional and national community through continuing education seminars and workshops offered through its Lifelong Learning service, and to distant locations via institutional affiliations. Included are the University College of Eastern Africa in Kenya, Helderberg College in South Africa, Newbold College in England and the Adventist Seminary of West Africa in Nigeria. Selected degree programs are also offered by Andrews at Columbia Union College in Washington, D.C.; Atlantic Union College near Boston, Mass.; Oakwood College in Huntsville, Ala.; Avondale College in Australia; Montemorelos University in Mexico; West Indies College in Jamaica and Antillian College in Puerto Rico.

Supporting this global education program is a thoroughly prepared faculty, 130 of whom have earned doctoral degrees. Many more are pursuing advanced training at some of the most prestigious universities in the world.

Andrews University Enrollment Figures*

*Institutional Research Department statistics for the fall quarter of each year.

Events relating to Capital Fund 1985 are also worthy of note, particularly as they relate to providing facilities for the enhancement of academic programs and other university services. The remodeling of Bell Hall is providing modern quarters for the many facets of the Education department. Another major achievement is completion of the medical center complex, with 13,000 square feet of office space for physicians and dentists serving the university population as well as community residents. Commercial development of university property fronting highway U.S. 31 continues with completion of a bank and adjoining building for professional offices. The new men's dormitory is under construction and targeted for occupancy in the spring of 1981.

These and other evidences of forward movement continue to make Andrews an exciting place to be, as well as a positive force in the community, the nation and the world. It is to the continuance of this impact that we commit our personal lives and our institutional resources in the years to come.

The Andrews School of Business

Sandra Doran

"Students seem to sense that business is where the action is," says Chairman William F. May of American Can Company. Quoted in the June 1980 issue of Dun's Review, May is one of many executives in the country today cognizant of the shift toward futures in business among students on college campuses.

Chairman Eugene J. Sullivan of Borden, Inc., also quoted in Dun's Review, explains the new business emphasis this way: "Today's economic realities are making the students much more practical and vocationally oriented. Harder times compel some degree of attention and sympathy for the economics of production and investment."

At Andrews University, the importance of providing professional training for these career-minded students of the eighties is not taken lightly. With the establishment of the School of Business, the university has demonstrated intentions of maintaining relevancy in offering an education suitable for the increasingly-complex demands of the business world.

Given final approval at an executive meeting of the university's board of trustees last July, the School of Business has been carefully drawn up over the past two years, according to Andrews President Joseph G. Smoot.

Serving as dean of the school is Dr. Dale E. Twomley, who has been at Andrews since 1978 as chairman of the business administration department. Twomley holds a master's degree in business administration from the University of Tennessee and a doctorate from the University of Maryland. With experience as a teacher and administrator at educational institutions in Washington, Maryland, New York, Massachusetts and Virginia, Twomley sees a focus on practical skills to be of prime importance in business training. And, as documented by Hunger and Wheelen's study published in Human Resource Manage- ment magazine last spring, such basic training is just what is needed for success as a business professional in the eighties. Mailed to 183 deans with accredited undergraduate business programs, as well as to senior personnel executives of Fortune Magazine's listing of the 200 largest industrial firms and the 50 largest firms in five main categories, the study's survey suggests that the most effective business programs focus on such basics as "developing logical thinking and communication skills."

"Knowledge acquisition of business principles or current practices is not as critical as learning the skills necessary to approach and deal with problems," state the researchers. According to Twomley, the philosophy of business education at Andrews echoes that sentiment, with direction aimed at "acquiring the tools, rather than just theory."

Andrews' business teachers bring a wide spectrum of experience to the classroom, with specialized skills in a number of areas. The university continues to enrich the experience of its faculty by sponsoring their attendance at such institutions as Northwestern University, Arizona

State University, the University of Oregon and the University of Michigan.

This year in the School of Business, there are 14 teachers, with eight holding doctoral degrees. Others are scheduled for study leave, to complete doctorates within the next few years.

Specializing in accounting are certified public accountants Linvol Henry and Jon Wentworth, along with W. Davis Albrecht and Allen Stembridge, all of whom hold advanced degrees in business administration.

Offering expertise in the areas of marketing and management are Keith Murray, who earned a degree from Pepperdine University in Los Angeles as well as Boston University; Nabil Razzouk, who holds a doctor of business administration from the University of Arizona; and Dr. Robert Schwab. Classes in business law are taught by Norman Perry, attorney at law. Twomley, along with Drs. Robert Firth—former chairman of the business administration department and presently director of the University Press—Robert Schwab and doctoral candidate Gary Hamel present several courses in the over-all field of business administration.

Professors Leonard Gashugi, who holds degrees from Fordham University, and

Dr. Malcolm Russell, who received two advanced degrees from Johns Hopkins University teach courses in economics. Currently on study leave are Bruce Wrenn and David Swaine, marketing and economics specialists.

The courses offered by the School of Business provide a solid foundation both on the graduate and undergraduate levels. The bachelor of business administration program offers majors in accounting, economics, information science, marketing and management. The master of business administration degree features specialties in general management and hospital administration. Graduate students can complete degree requirements in four academic quarters if they have completed all the preparatory work. Those with no prior training in business can complete the program in seven quarters.

Currently the School of Business is working toward gaining accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB). The AACSB is the only recognized accrediting body of business programs and is an organization operated by AACSB-accredited schools, says Twomley. While only 18 percent of the United States institutions granting degrees are accredited by AACSB, more than 50 percent of the undergraduate business degrees are granted by AACSB-accredited schools, he adds. Graduates of AACSB-accredited programs are accorded a preferred position in employers' recruitment efforts and also when applying for graduate study in business administration.

Since AACSB accreditation assures international recognition of a high-quality business program, it is of particular value to Andrews, with its students from nearly 90 countries.

According to President Smoot, specific Andrews University programs are presently accredited by eight professional organizations in addition to a full 10-year institutional accreditation through the doctoral level by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools. The accreditation of the business unit by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business is another step in the university's planned effort of securing national recognition for selected programs of study, he says.

Also on the drawing board for the School of Business is a new facility, with adequate provision for teaching, research and other activities. To be constructed southeast of the James White Library and adjacent to the Science Complex, the structure will help the School of Business in developing a separate identity and attaining increased visibility, says Twomley. Funds for the building will come from Andrews' Capital Fund 1985.

“With the help of a far-seeing administration and cooperative alumni, training in business at Andrews is far from a static program,” Twomley asserts. “Together we can be proud to know that we are giving our students a dynamic and highly relevant preparation for productive and professional futures.”

Achieving Success in the

Corporate World

Behind every good business lurks a learned businessman. But increasing questions are being raised as to what kind of educated people are best for business.

From a 1979 study of Dun and Bradstreet data on current corporate management in the U.S., perhaps the most striking finding was that "of the 2,931 chairmen, vice chairmen and presidents of America's largest corporations, over 60 percent graduated from private institutions. And of those with advanced degrees, 74 percent earned them at private universities."

Those trained to skillfully handle specific tasks—specialists and technicians—are significant contributors to the world of modern business. Just as essential, however, especially at the highest levels of management, are those whose education has provided them with broad perspectives, values, and the ability to analyze and communicate effectively to face the challenges presented by a rapidly changing society.

Private higher education provides unique advantages to American business—the development of true leadership in a time when it is much needed in this country and a drive to pursue quality, excellence and productivity.

The Andrews University School of Business is no exception. Its alumni are going places, experiencing success in the corporate world with their individual contributions and interpretations of "big business."

Designed to provide students with basic business skills and a wide background of knowledge in the field of business and economics, the School of Business at Andrews encourages students to prepare for business positions of responsibility in a wide range of settings.

Programs including areas of accounting, management, personnel, economics, finance and marketing are taught in a special way to help students develop a sound Christian philosophy of ethics for the business world today. Opportunities for cooperative work experiences with local businesses are also available for practical on-the-job training.

Andrews alumni are keeping up with the standards of academic excellence and high achievement that is well-recognized in private institutions. Among 30 Michigan colleges whose business graduates sat for the May 1980 CPA exam, Andrews ranked in the top five institutions with the highest number of passes, reported the Michigan Department of Licensing and Regulation and its Board of Accountancy. Two Andrews students passed the entire exam on the first sitting.

According to Dr. Dale Twomley, Dean of the new School of Business at Andrews, graduates are not disappointed with the job opportunities they find after graduation.

"Today, graduates are realizing that many jobs on the market are business education oriented. Business positions are available for those people with undergraduate as well as graduate degrees."

A partial survey of recent graduates from the Andrews' MBA program also revealed that more than 20 are now employed in hospital management positions, including four in top administrative posts.

Many colleges in the United States—and two overseas—have employed Andrews' business graduates to chair their departments of business administration. Other alumni are active managing bookstores, serving as treasurers of educational institutions or directing business affairs of public and private enterprises.

Dan Woolf, for example, is serving as president of Woolf Aircraft Products, headquartered near Detroit, Michigan; Allan Buller is executive vice president of Worthington Foods, a division of Miles Laboratories. Richard Brace works in Casselberry, Florida, as an investment analyst for Merrill-Lynch; Nadi Soltan is a realtor in Riverside, California; Rigmor Tiranchie heads the auditing section of the Swedish International Development Authority. Michael O. Ogundairo is senior lecturer for the Koduna Polytechnic in the Nigeria Department of Commerce; Samir Andrawos is controller of Island Gem Enterprises in Miami, Florida; Dale A. O'Chap is controller and manager of international sales for Advance Products Corporation in Benton Harbor; and Anthony R. Tauro is labor relations specialist for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Is there business after college? For those formerly enrolled in the many business programs at Andrews, the answer is positive. Success!

Rugged individualism first brought the settlers to America in the early 17th century. They wanted the freedom to build their own lives through honest labor and to be free to worship as they chose. In this way, they could develop a democratic republic compatible with their desires. The revolt against the British king constituted a sharp divergence in the political ideas of the mother country and the American colonies.

For this reason, Andrews University was established in an agricultural area in Southwestern Michigan on the banks of the St. Joseph River. Today, a thriving farm of more than a thousand acres with a prize dairy herd, a furniture manufacturing enterprise, a book bindery of outstanding reputation, a modern printing business, a commercial laundry and a unique retail grocery store along with several other businesses and

Commitment to Free Enterprise

Joseph G. Smoot

Thomas Jefferson wrote the words "life, liberty, and property" in a remarkable statement in the Declaration of Independence. Congress substituted the phrase "pursuit of happiness" to indicate a broader application of the right of free people to engage in their own private enterprises and concerns.

The new American nation quickly entered the age of the industrial revolution. A vast undeveloped country stretched across the mountains and plains to the Pacific Ocean. The formation of capital, the industrialization of America, and the limited role of government in the daily lives of people all held a large influence in the course of American history.

Among the freedoms that Americans treasured was the right to establish private colleges and operate them through public charters. The Supreme Court in the Dartmouth College case in 1819 settled the future of private higher education on a basis that permitted it to flourish in 19th century America. The state could not revoke Dartmouth College's charter and interfere with the independent development of that distinguished institution of higher education.

In this setting, Andrews University entered the educational scene in the midwest more than a century ago in 1874. At Andrews, the freedoms to work, study and worship are a part of the university's past and are jealously guarded today. The philosophy of a work-study program is a fundamental educational concept at Andrews, as is the right to learn in the context of Christian faith.

If a person does some productive work while engaged in a program of study, the positive benefits of a balanced education become readily apparent. The responsibility of a job, the challenge of arranging a class and work schedule, and the experience of relating intellectual concerns to practical tasks all come into play in a formative time for young lives.

service entities provide Andrews students with opportunities to earn while they learn. Some 80 percent of Andrews University students work in university-operated enterprises. These independent businesses are taxable, having to compete in the open market. Productive labor and profits are watch words in the operation of the university's business operations. Consequently, the free enterprise system in America is more than just a theory at Andrews University. Our students and managers are active participants in the American economic system.

Should the university be interested in the free enterprise system that has made America the richest nation in the world? The Andrews answer is a resounding "yes." The voluntary private sector is under constant pressure from government that seeks to regulate and control far more than at any time in our history. Survival is at stake. Private business and private education are the major sectors remaining in the American economy today attempting to preserve the traditional freedoms of our past.

Free enterprise is a concept that underlies all that we do at Andrews. It concerns the right of our students to choose to learn as they live lives of Christian belief. It concerns the rights of teachers to stress our free heritage. It concerns the right of the university to exist and foster an educational philosophy that makes Andrews unique in American higher education. It enables students to achieve competencies that have educational value in their own right, to be dependent for part of their educational expenses through productive labor, and to learn that the dignity of labor is a value for the free human spirit.

“From this atmosphere, tomorrow’s strong, moral and innovative leadership will surely come.”

From today’s colleges and universities will come tomorrow’s leaders.

Although the thought is not an original one, it is one which bears repeating, simply because it best summarizes the real contribution educational institutions have to make to society . . . today and tomorrow.

In every field . . . at every level of leadership . . . it will be today’s students who must have the vision, the determination, the commitment, the energy and the training to creatively lead our society to a tomorrow that will mean better lives, richer values and higher standards.

On the following pages, the leaders of southwestern Michigan’s business and industrial community talk about the future of business, and about how Andrews University—and more specifically, the new Andrews School of Business—will contribute to that future.

"I applaud Andrews for its vision."

*William Johnson
President

Exponential advances in technology over the past 50 years have dramatically changed the way people look at, and react to, their world.

Electronic communication networks have literally leapfrogged continents and cultures—proliferating new ideas and dispelling old ones. The effects on our society and the world community have been profound.

We can expect even more rapid technological change in the years ahead—for it is certain to come. And we had best be prepared to deal with the resulting changes—for they are likewise certain to come.

Looking back, the radio was the forefather of today's global communications network. A simple silicone crystal device—followed in quick succession by the vacuum tube, the transistor, integrated circuits and today's powerful micro-processor. Each has contributed incrementally to the extension of mass media, from local, regional and national levels—to worldwide, outer space and inter-planetary communications. Marconi could hardly have envisioned a live television broadcast from the moon!

The startling achievements of our recent past are a strong testimony to the ingenuity and cooperation of a wide variety of specialists in technology, science, industry and government. And although many of these developments have made our lives easier, they have also brought complexities. The "information explosion" as a result of improved methods of gathering, processing, storing and disseminating information has, for example, placed a tremendous burden on those who would keep abreast of advancing knowledge. A rapidly expanding communications industry has brought people closer together, yet created urgent demands for new approaches to solving human relations problems. A perfect example of "the dichotomy of progress."

Looking forward. Emerging is a critical need for people who are not only able to mix the resources of business with technology, but are able to make the moral judgments necessary for the highest and best use of existing and new technologies. Schools such as Andrews University, which offer business, technology and ethics as well as arts and sciences, are going a long way toward preparing us for the challenges of tomorrow's world.

I applaud Andrews for its vision, its commitment to excellence, and its strong sense of values. It is from this kind of atmosphere that tomorrow's strong, moral and innovative leadership will surely come.

"...providing quality education with a difference."

The Free Enterprise system in this country has produced an amazing array of products which have made the American standard of living one of the highest in the world.

American know-how has been a leader not only in providing goods and services necessary to the maintenance of our standard of living, but also in the preparation of young professionals knowledgeable in how the system works. Keeping abreast of market trends and responding to them with useful, good quality products is the ever present challenge facing American industry. With the help of enthusiastic and enlightened managers, we will continue to be a powerful force in the world marketplace.

The essential ingredient in this equation is people—eager to do a job beyond the minimum requirements and possessing an education which gives them a full appreciation of the principles of business. Perhaps even more important, we need people with the values and personal stamina needed to make good decisions when confronted with very difficult problems.

Such people are, more often than not, prepared by schools such as Andrews University, which include extra dimensions in their programs. The concept of making business training stronger by concentrating courses within the School of Business, as Andrews has done, is certainly going to help in providing quality education with a difference. American business will be the chief beneficiary.

Markets may change, but the demand for qualified business graduates remains constant.

Whether related to the automotive industry or any one of hundreds of manufacturing and service fields available to business professionals today, people are looking for business graduates who not only have a solid command of the basic academic areas but an acquaintance with the practical aspects of how to face problems, surmount obstacles and get the job done.

There are a wide range of specialty areas within the business field which require even greater degrees of training and commitment than ever before. Manufacturing has its unique challenges in the face of increasing shortages of resources, raw materials and qualified labor, not to mention the complexities of safety, health, environmental and other regulations from all levels of government.

Marketing also is requiring people to be on the alert more than ever before. New trends on the national and international scenes as they relate to consumer tastes are even more critical to the success, or failure, of business concerns.

Schools of business—like the one recently established at Andrews University—are playing an important role in meeting these and other needs. Cooperation between business and education has always been a beneficial arrangement, and one which will become more important in the future.

“Our system must attract the most capable people...”

American industry remains the cornerstone upon which the greatness of our country was built. That rugged spirit of ingenuity and individualism displayed by the pioneers is vibrantly alive today, among the business executives and management specialists who keep the machinery of business and industry moving.

The continued vitality of our nation is dependent, to a large degree, upon the health of our businesses and industries, as well as the quality of the people associated with them. Our system must attract the most capable people who have an appreciation for not only the values of our economic enterprises, but also the personal qualities necessary to make them operate successfully.

The future clearly is in the hands of younger professionals who will rise through the ranks and eventually command widespread manufacturing and distributing concerns.

My association with the Michigan Colleges Foundation (a consortium of business leaders and private educational institutions banded together to seek support for member colleges) has convinced me of the tremendous role education is playing in providing such talent for tomorrow's needs. The educational sector has great strength—in business administration departments and, particularly, in the emerging schools of business. They are fulfilling their responsibility of instilling in younger professionals not only the skills but also a sense of purpose which will carry us toward the goals we hold for the common good.

Our future is brighter with institutions such as Andrews University, which seek to place themselves in the forefront of this important effort.

“Our primary source of entry-level professionals is the nation’s educational institutions.”

Throughout the United States, the banking industry is vitally dependent upon a well-trained group of financial specialists. Without them, the orderly financial transactions we all depend upon would be impossible.

Two things are essential to banking—accounting ability and managerial talent. Our primary source of entry-level professionals is the nation’s educational institutions. Andrews University, of course, is widely known for the track record of its students.

Once a solid grasp of accounting is gained, employees can then be developed into skilled specialists in a number of areas, and into managers and administrators with expertise in a wide range of career categories.

The key element is quality education which gives students a broad base in a variety of academic and technical areas. Schools of business are in the forefront of this trend by signaling themselves out for special emphasis and recognition within the collegiate community. Such business schools will undoubtedly play an increasingly important role in the future of the financial community throughout the world.

“We need more institutions like Andrews University to lead the way.”

*Dave Stockman
Director, U.S. Office of Management and Budget*

Rapid expansion of governmental involvement in the business sector is the distinguishing characteristic of the last decade. Vast new areas of Federal concern—environmental protection, workplace safety, energy regulation, and equal opportunity—have made government an active, and often oppressive, partner in the conduct of business enterprises.

While certain cooperative relationships seem to be necessary or desirable—such as common sense environmental clean-up and research and development support for new energy technologies—the vast majority of people are sensing that regulation has become excessive and counterproductive to basic societal goals. The time has come for a more discriminating and intelligent approach to the relationship between proper public policy and the need for a revitalized free enterprise economy.

Educating businessmen to effectively contribute to this needed regulatory reform is an increasingly important challenge. It will provide a unique opportunity to business schools for years to come. Not only will professionals have to be skilled in certain basics and able to predict trends and market developments, they will have to know how to deal with government on all levels and to respond constructively to social problems arising in the private sector.

This will require a development of a moral and ethical framework on the part of graduates who will then be in positions to make balanced decisions for the benefit of society as a whole. We need more institutions like Andrews University to lead the way in providing this education with a difference.

The Andrews University Financial Report for 1980

Behind every institution that is constantly progressing toward its ultimate goal of service and excellence is always a very important group of people. Collectively called the "donors" to the university, they are, individually, the people to whom a school like Andrews owes one of its greatest debts. It is their dedicated financial underwriting of the institution's efforts that permits Andrews to meet the challenges of excellence—in programs, in faculty, and in physical facilities.

On the following pages, the university's vice president for financial administration first discusses the financial highlights of the past year at Andrews, and then the university pays tribute to the thousands of individuals and organizations who have supported Andrews' move toward a higher standard of achievement in private education.

Financial Report for 1980

Vernon H. Siver, Vice President
For Financial Administration

The Comparative Statement of Current Fund Revenues and Expenditures included in this report describes in summary the financial activity of Andrews University for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1980. Also provided is a percentage breakdown of the various revenues and expenditures for the educational and general department, the auxiliaries which include housing and food service operations, bookstore, laundry and other activities related to the educational program, and lastly, the independent operations which are industries not related to the ordinary activities of an educational institution.

The report shows an increase of $47,268 to the current unrestricted fund balance which now totals $3,100,444. The growth of the fund balance is important to the university since it provides the working capital necessary to operate the institution. Concerted efforts are underway to not only increase the size of the fund but to improve its liquidity to provide the required cash for day-to-day operations.

The current restricted fund balance shows a decrease for the fiscal year because funds received for specific purposes in the previous year were not actually expended until after July 1, 1979.

During the last five years the endowment fund of the university has increased by 88 percent from $1,002,630 to $1,883,034. The yield to the fund during the last year was $169,887. We are encouraging the further development of this fund balance as its annual yield is of great help in assisting students to attend the university.

The book value of assets recorded in the plant fund has increased during the past five years by 39 percent to $33,834,177 against which long-term indebtedness exists in the amount of $5,489,272. Replacement value of plant assets for insurance purposes is $88,000,000.

It is well understood by the management of the university that financial success is greatly dependent on the loyalty of students, parents, faculty, and staff and the continued generosity of church members, alumni, and friends of the university, including many business corporations and foundations. Nearly $900,000 was received during the past year as voluntary support from these various sources.

That God has blessed the affairs of the university is visibly evident. We face the future in spite of difficult economic times with courage and faith that with the continuing support of the various constituencies and under God's divine guidance and blessing, even greater things may be accomplished at Andrews University.

Donors to Andrews University July 1, 1979, to June 30, 1980

The strength of a university can be measured in many ways. The caliber of its student body, the expertise of its faculty and the contributions it makes to society are usually considered in evaluating the worth of an educational institution. However, the most meaningful indicator is the enthusiasm expressed through continuous support by alumni and friends desiring to return value for value received.

The Andrews University Annual Giving Program is the very heart of the University's broad program of gift support. The essential student aid program as well as the vital upgrading of the current instructional program and facilities are just three of the many needs supplied by the combining of the thoughtful gifts from alumni, corporations, foundations, trustees, faculty, staff, church organizations and friends.

Support is essential if private higher education is to continue, and particularly if institutions like Andrews are to safeguard their vital margins of excellence. Andrews, like all outstanding private universities, relies heavily on its annual and deferred giving programs. Each year generous gifts are received from foundations, corporations, trustees, alumni, church support and friends.

Andrews University has developed a wide diversity of plans for persons who wish to contribute to the university and thus invest in the principles for which Andrews University stands and to which it is committed.

Reminder System For those who wish to contribute regularly to the university, perhaps the most convenient way is to be included in the periodic reminder system. Simply determine the amount of the donation and select the date you wish to be notified of your commitment. The university will send you a remittance envelope. If at any time you decide to change the date of your reminder, you may do so directly by alerting the office of development.

Cash Outright cash gifts may be tax-deductible up to 50 percent of a donor's adjusted gross income. Such gifts may generate substantial tax savings for you, especially if you are in a higher income tax bracket.

Matching Gifts Many of the nation's major corporations use matching gifts as a means of contributing to higher education. Employee gifts are matched by their employers, thereby doubling the value of the employee gift. The company gives to those institutions closely associated with its employees—but only after the institution has received the employee's contribution. When making a gift, employees should determine whether their company will match it by contacting their personnel office for a matching gift form to mail with the gift.

Gifts of Personal Property The university welcomes gifts of personal property, such as library collections, works of art, furniture, equipment or real estate. These may be deducted at fair market value up to 30 percent (if appreciated, or 50 percent if not appreciated) of a donor's adjusted gross income. Or, if desired, you may retain them during your lifetime, adjusting the deduction to the value of the retained life interest.

Trusts Two types of trusts are available: revocable and irrevocable. Benefits of revocable trusts are basically tax benefits for the present and the future.

You may arrange with the university, your lawyer or your bank to place some or all of your assets in a living trust. The income will be reserved for life for you or your beneficiaries, with the remainder going to the university. Additional assets may be periodically deposited in the trust if desired.

Bequests Gifts of cash or property willed to the university are not subject to federal and state estate tax. The most useful bequests are unrestricted ones, available for use where there is the greatest need. A bequest may also establish an endowment fund for unrestricted use or purpose consistent with the wishes of the donor.

Insurance Plans Gifts of life insurance may take several forms. You may name Andrews University the irrevocable beneficiary of your policy, an arrangement which permits a deduction equal to the cash surrender value of the policy and additional deductions for all premiums paid subsequently.

You may alternately designate the university as contingent beneficiary. Policy proceeds are not subject to federal estate tax.

Memorials Funds may be created to memorialize an event, a loved one, an outstanding person in a particular field or another designee of the donor. Scholarships, buildings or portions of buildings, equipment and lectureships are some items which make appropriate memorials. The office of development will be happy to supply more specific information about bequests and memorials and their appropriate wording.

Securities, Real Estate Assets which have risen in value since acquisition make valuable gifts to the university. These are deductible at full current value and avoid the capital gains tax. Contact the development office for information on passing the title to the university.

Depreciated Property For tax reasons, it may be advantageous for you to sell property which has depreciated in value. You may deduct the loss on your federal tax return, contribute the proceeds of the sale to the university and list this amount as a charitable gift.

Donative Sale You may wish to recover the cost of appreciated property and donate only the appreciation. If so, you may sell the property to the university for the original purchase price, contributing the excess as a gift. The appreciation is deductible and you pay capital gains tax, prorated, based on the portion you have retained.

Gifts in Kind Contributions such as art objects, jewelry, antiques, paintings, books and other valuable property may be given to Andrews University. A receipt is given on the fair market value of the property on the day of the gift as determined by the donor appraisal and the university. A charitable deduction on the donor's federal income tax return is allowed if property is related to the educational functions of the university. The property is effectively removed from the estate and, therefore, is not subject to the federal estate tax.

The numerous ways of giving to Andrews are designed to meet the ever-increasing needs of the institution. Building construction, specialized equipment, supplies, books and other resource material, scholarships and a host of other needs demand your careful consideration as you are deciding how to contribute to the university.

The university has on its staff experienced professionals to provide you with personal assistance and up-to-date information on giving opportunities. For further information on ways you can assist Andrews and ways we can help you, please contact:

Trustees, Faculty and Staff

The University trustees, faculty and staff not only give of their time and teaching expertise to strengthen the academic program and make Andrews a quality institution but they also contribute substantially to the university's Annual Giving Program.

Friends

Andrews University receives many gifts each year from persons whose relationship to the university is that of "friends." Most of these gifts are unrestricted, others are designated for a specific purpose. These gifts are a source of strong support for which the university is deeply grateful.

Andrews Alumni

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven... Ecc. 3:1

A Time to Share

DIRECTOR'S COLUMN

Ralph M. Coupland

The "Andrews Experience" Has a Rich Heritage

Andrews University represents a rich heritage of Christian education for thousands. As a former student, you have shared in this heritage and experience. Through you and the alumni family, vast multitudes have been touched in a significant way. This circle of influence now reaches around the globe.

The years have passed since your "Andrews experience." Perhaps at the time, you did not realize how this experience would influence you as a person—not only while on campus but long after you left Berrien Springs. The impact of your "Andrews experience" would remain and continue to influence you throughout life.

Even though life's journey may have taken you far from the campus, your "Andrews experience" continues to tie you in many important ways to the campus today. You are still an important Andrews person. It is your values and ideals, your skills and achievements, that give credit to Andrews today. Because of your influence, superior and dedicated students are still attracted to share in this rich "Andrews experience." It is your accomplishments that bring joy and gratification to a gifted faculty.

As a former student, I am sure you have considered where you would be today had you not gone through your "Andrews experience." Would your values and skills be the same? What about all of those treasured memories and experiences shared—those cherished friendships and noble ideals cultivated and developed? Certainly today is built on yesterday and tomorrow cannot be less than these.

In more recent years, the "Andrews experience" for many was focused within the College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Technology, the School of Graduate Studies or the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary. The most recent addition to this group of educational entities within the university structure is the new School of Business. Soon graduates from this school will be joining the alumni ranks.

For many others their "Andrews experience" was found in Emmanuel Missionary College and, for still others, the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary and Potomac University of Washington, D.C. There are even a few who still look back on their educational experiences at Battle Creek and Broadview Colleges.

Today, Andrews continues to reach for a "higher standard" of educational opportunity and experience. The ideals of a Christian education, a finished work through Christ, and a "blessed hope" for the future, remain central.

Rooted in these high ideals, and built with confidence on a rich and varied heritage, Andrews' commitment still intends to provide a meaningful "Andrews experience" for today's youth. This is a noble and formidable challenge. Yet with your continuing support and the blessing of heaven, we may join together in helping to provide that meaningful "Andrews experience" for many hundreds of students in the days to come.

Alumni Enjoy World Tour

The collective impression of 18 alumni and friends of Andrews University who traveled east from Sept. 7 to Oct. 6 was that it is a very small world after all. The World Mission Tour, sponsored by the Andrews' Alumni Association under the direction of its president, Edwin Dass, offered members a new perspective and flavor of the expanding mission work in overseas countries.

Led by Dr. Walter Brown, recently retired director of the department of education at the General Conference, the group witnessed how prayerful support and monetary contributions help to develop these programs.

The tour highlighted Seventh-day Adventist missions as well as scenic and cultural points of interest in eight countries. Departing from Chicago, the group arrived first in London for a visit to Newbold College, then to the Evangelistic Center in the heart of the city.

Continuing southeast to Rome, they traveled to the Vatican City, with emphasis placed on the history of the Christian churches and the foundations of the Catholic Church and its spread. Mission headquarters, the mission station and headquarters of the Adventist church in Rome were included.

Next, the travelers flew to India, where at Poona, they explored the grounds and curriculum at Spicer College and the Southern Asia Division headquarters. In Delhi, stops were made at the mission headquarters, the interior mission station and the Delhi central church.

In the Far East, Bangkok, Thailand and Hong Kong were the scheduled stops along the travel route. Mission headquarters were featured visits.

In Manila, Philippines, alumni and friends toured Philippine Union College, the only Adventist institution outside of North America to offer post-graduate degrees. From Manila, the group toured Tokyo and the mission station there. The final stop was a restful weekend in Honolulu, where the group attended services at the Honolulu church.

Edwin Dass MA '69, president of the alumni association, officially represented the university and coordinated the tour.

Thanks to pre-tour correspondence, the group was able to meet with other groups of Adventist workers in these countries. According to Dass, approximately 200 Andrews alumni lived along the tour route. He reports meeting close to 160 alumni in all. On many occasions, alumni organized special programs and prepared meals for the group.

At Newbold College, Dr. Sakae Kubo BA '47 MA '54 BD '55, the institution's president and former Andrews University faculty member, met with the group of alumni at a luncheon followed with a question-and-answer period on Andrews' development for the future.

John Matthews BA '67, MA '75, dean of men, and his wife Marla ('77-'79), arranged for tours of the campus. Noted by the travelers was that Newbold emphasized the specialties of certain disciplines with much detailed study and research as compared to Andrews' broader spectrum of general education requirements.

One of the most enjoyable visits was at Spicer College in Poona, India, recalls Dass. The group met M. E. Cherian MA '56 MA '57, who was a 1976 Andrews alumnus of distinction. Dr. Cherian, president of the college, arranged for an entertaining cultural program of Indian folk music and dance to be put on by the student body. In the native ceremony of lamplighting, the alumni were especially honored. The guests were also treated to a huge meal of native Indian foods. Following, about 20 to 30 alumni joined the group in a discussion regarding the progress of Andrews curriculum and building projects.

In a brief speech, Dr. Cherian told of his personal indebtedness to Andrews for the contribution it had made to his life. "People will not look forward to educational posterity who never look back to their educational heritage and alma mater," he said.

"The questions most asked by our overseas Andrews alumni include what we are doing to accommodate programs that will be beneficial to the foreign institutions," Dass explained further.

In Bangkok, the group was received by Donald Sahly BS '70 MA '73, former executive director of Andrews alumni and currently the principal of Ekamai Adventist English Secondary School, with an approximate enrollment of 1,400 students. The alumni meeting drew 50 to 60 people. Abel Pangman MA '78, from the Philippines, was presented with a medallion for outstanding mission work.

Dr. Yew Chong Wong EdD '76, academic dean at South China Union College, met the alumni group in Hong Kong. With him was Dr. C. H. Tidwell, president of the college and former professor at Spicer College. His children are graduates of Andrews. Samuel Young MA '67 MDiv '67 BD '67, president of the Hong Kong mission, coordinated the alumni meetings with Dr. Tidwell. Dass described it as one of the most active Andrews University alumni associations overseas. About 25 alumni asked questions about Andrews' progress as an institution to meet international needs. People were very thankful for what the school is doing for its current students and people around the world, according to Dass.

An extensive trip to so many parts of the world is bound to leave memories of unfamiliar foods, broken-down buses and unfluffed pillows. But according to Ed Dass, the fellowship with church members and old Andrews friends around the globe stand out above all else. "It felt so good to be a part of God's family," he said.

Stored in the tourist's memories are visions of the Taj Mahal, the Roman Coliseum, Tokyo Tower and St. Peter's Cathedral. Alongside them was the opportunity to offer a penniless woman from Bulgaria some help in getting back to her country after her belongings were stolen in Rome. Dass recently received a letter from her in which she said she would remember the group for two things: Andrews University and how kind the American people are from that institution.

Dass and the group returned with a strong challenge for all alumni—an urgency, a dedication, a looking for the second coming of the Lord.

Fulton College Reaches Out

Suva, capital of Fiji is home to several theological institutions of great significance to the South Pacific region. Pacific Theological College, a Protestant ecumenical institution trains ministers for several large Pacific denominations. Pacific Regional Seminary is home for young nationals aspiring to the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church in the South Pacific.

Fulton College, training center for Adventist ministers in the South Pacific, is situated only thirty miles from Suva. A well educated ministry is often in the vanguard of development and community leadership in the emerging countries of the South Pacific. It seemed obvious to the staff of Fulton's Theology Department that interchange with staff and students at Suva's theological schools would lay the groundwork for useful interaction later, as students became professionals working throughout the Pacific.

From 1978 onwards, occasional contacts between Fulton and the Pacific Regional Seminary have developed into more regular visits. Fulton staff and students have attended seminars and religious gatherings at the Seminary, while priests in training have visited Fulton. They have observed Adventist education in action, and dialogued with Adventist ministers in the making.

Fulton has made two friends in particular. One is Father Foliaki, Tongan priest who is principal of the Seminary. The other is Father John Broadbent, professor of both Church History and Pacific History. In response to the kindness of these men from the Seminary, Fulton Theology staff and students decided to make a presentation to the Seminary. During a March 1980 visit, Theology director, Lyell Heise MDiv '75, and Ministerial League President, Waisea Vuniwa presented Samuele Bacchiocchi's book From Sabbath to Sunday to Foliaki and Broadbent. In this way, Bacchiocchi's scholarship has been able to extend the influence of Adventist theology and friendship in Fiji, at the heart of the Pacific.

Who Shall Teach Our Little Ones? by Geeta R. Lall, PhD (current faculty member) Review and Herald Publishing Association.

The question of child training in the home is becoming a major issue in our contemporary society with so many mothers working outside the home and the care of children left to supervisors of day-care centers or to teachers. Divine Rest for Human Restlessness by Samuele Bacchiocchi PhD MA '62, MDiv '64. Pontifical Gregorian Press.

The book is a theological interpretation of the Sabbath for contemporary human needs. As a sequel to his earlier study From Sabbath to Sunday, this second book deals with the history of the Lord's Day in early Christianity.

Bacchiocchi has been a member of the Andrews religion department faculty since 1974. He is the only non-Catholic to have obtained a doctorate from Rome's Pontifical Gregorian University since the school opened 425 years ago.

The King Was No Fool by Reuben Hilde MA '53. Review and Herald Publishing Association.

From the prospective of youth, Hilde explores Solomon's life and the Lord's response to the request for wisdom. So well are incidents of this mighty ruler recounted, there is never a hint of preaching, leaving the reader to draw his own conclusions and apply to his own life the lessons learned.

They of Rome by Lois Parker BS '57. Review and Herald Publishing Association.

The world of Linus and Gilla crumbled about them. They were far from their home in a strange country with different language and customs. Their father, King Cogidubnus, had sent them to the city of Rome where they would grow up as hostages to ensure their father's loyalty to the Empire. But in Rome they encountered a new faith spreading through the huge, teeming city: Christianity. Soon they accepted the lordship of Christ and found themselves caught up in the struggle of the infant Roman church to survive persecution.

Parker has brought history alive. She is author of Princess of the

Two Lands and Brothers of the Longhouse.

Amazing Facts Library of Sermons by Joe Crews MA '47. Review and Herald Publishing Association.

These thirteen new booklets by the Amazing Facts speaker, Joe Crews, present major Seventh-day Adventist doctrines in a factual, yet gripping manner. This pocket-size series will be especially helpful to churches, pastors, evangelists and laymen for mass distribution at a very low cost.

Clean! by William G. Johnsson MA '66. Review and Herald Publishing Association.

Most of us take baptism for granted. But should we? When was the last time you reflected on the meaning of baptism? Johnsson puts this important Christian ceremony into its proper setting. In easy-to-understand terms he discusses our persistent feelings of dirtiness, our search for cleansing, the origin of Christian baptism, the significance of baptism in the early church and the importance of baptism in the church today.

Johnsson is associate editor of the Adventist Review. He is the author of The Great Physician, Religion in Overalls and In Absolute Confidence.

A Theology and Ethics of Sex by Sakae Kubo BA '47 MA '54 BD '55. Review and Herald Publishing Association.

Christianity has reacted to the topic of sex in a wide variety of ways. Some Christians have rejected sex as inherently sinful, to be avoided at all costs. Many have viewed it warily, as something to tolerate in an imperfect world, to be kept within careful and rigidly narrow limits. Others have seen it as a wonderful gift from God.

Kubo, president of Newbold College in England, examines both the scriptural concept of human sexuality and the ethical issues involved in the many sexual questions facing us today. Kubo is the author of such books as God Meets Man, Calculated Goodness and Once Saved, Always Saved? He has contributed to both popular and scholarly journals.

How to Handle Fatigue by Marvin Moore MA '61 MDiv '69. Review and Herald Publishing Association.

This book is a practical discussion of the causes of fatigue and how to overcome fatigue.

On Educating the Whole Person

Max Torkelsen

Editor's Note:

On a visit to the Andrews campus in October, Max Torkelsen, chairman of the university's Board of Trustees, was interviewed by FOCUS magazine. In addition to church leadership positions as conference president in California, president of the North Pacific Union headquartered in Portland, Oregon, and his present post as vice president of the General Conference, Torkelsen has served as principal of several secondary schools, as board member of Loma Linda University and Pacific Union College in California, and, most recently, as chairman of the board of trustees of Walla Walla College in Washington state. He holds a master's degree in educational administration from Colorado State University.

FOCUS:

Could you define your role as chairman of the board of Andrews University?

TORKELSEN:

Naturally, we look to the administration of the school to take care of the operations and to move the program forward. I see my role of board chairman as one of support for the excellent programs that are underway! I have learned that it is much easier to call for the vote as a chairman than it is to wrestle the problems from day to day. I am happy to go on record assuring the administration of Andrews University of loyal support. I desire to be of help in any way possible. It is true that, to a degree, I stand as a mediator between Andrews and the General Conference, in cases where Dr. Smoot or someone from his staff is not present to speak for the university. I am thinking of meetings held at the General Conference level where budgets, appropriations, or possibly other aspects of the university program might be discussed.

FOCUS:

Could you verbalize your philosophy of education, particularly as it relates to your position of chairman of the board of Andrews?

TORKELSEN:

I do have strong convictions concerning the world scope of our educational program. One of the first things that comes to mind is the necessity of educating the whole person for life as it presents itself in a modern world of the 1980s. It is extremely important that we educate our young people for the practical aspects of life and try to give them something that is beyond strictly theoretical or rote type of learning. It is so important to today's world that we are able to cope with life and the pressures of society in which we find ourselves. We also need to consider the contributions that we hope to make as we mingle with people, particularly as it relates to our responsibility to our church and our God.

FOCUS:

Do you think that it is possible to have a blend between the standards of society and the standards of the church?

TORKELSEN:

My experience has been, at least on other levels of education that I have worked with and been involved with, that our particular type of education is very acceptable to accrediting bodies. They like what they see. I think our greater problem is to be sure that we are meeting the standards that we set and write for ourselves. An accrediting body basically judges a program by the things that you say that you want to do or accomplish. And if there were any observations I would have regarding our present-day system, it would be that we are not always reaching the objectives that we set for ourselves. This refers back somewhat to my thought on philosophy of education: that we are to train the whole person—addressing physical, mental, and spiritual aspects—as well as the social aspects of life. If we're going to accomplish that in the best way, we will be including emphasis in the spiritual realm, and a well-rounded practical program of work and study. I'm personally appreciative of the industrial programs that we have on most of our campuses, including Andrews University, where a student can develop a balanced program of work and study, as well as having an opportunity for social development as well. When we put all of these things together, in the proper proportions, we come out with a product that is ready to meet life and the world.

I would like to make further comments on the general subject of accreditation. We have probably placed more emphasis than we should have on this part of the educational program over the years. It is my feeling that if we carefully follow the counsels that we have, as well as the stated objectives of education that we have set down over the years, we really need not concern ourselves unduly with accreditation per se, because we will find ourselves at the forefront of educational activity. In other words, in a real sense, we are our own best accreditors with the excellent help that we have from the counsel of Ellen White. We can cite many institutions that wish they might do similar things in balancing the program of the physical, spiritual and mental. The program of Christian education presents a distinct advantage in many respects.

THANK YOU

In the early summer, we requested your help. We made a special appeal to our readers to begin a voluntary subscription program — voluntary because whether or not you chose to lend financial support to the magazine, you'd still receive it. We asked that those of you who wanted to see FOCUS continue at its present level of excellence express that support by voluntarily subscribing to the magazine.

And now it's time to say "Thanks" to those of you who responded. $5,000 has been raised. Many readers sent in the requested $7.50, and others sent much larger gifts. To all of you, we offer our sincere gratitude. You've let us know how you feel about the magazine, and we'll do our best to continue to keep you informed of life at Andrews University.

If you've not yet sent your gift, this year's campaign is still continuing. Remember that your donation goes directly into the FOCUS budget, and will help keep the lines of communication open between you and Andrews.

Developing a Concept Of Greater Service

Are you taking advantage of the personal services available to you through Andrews University's department of development? Did you know that Andrews has a staff of professionals to assist you in arranging the details of your estate to benefit the charities you hold close to your heart as well as your loved ones?

You see, at Andrews we recognize the sacred responsibility you have in the management of the material possessions God has placed under your control. As you look to the future with your own needs for security in addition to your intentions for estate distribution, it is only natural for you to look to the institution of learning that has been of such importance to you in career training for assistance in your estate distribution as well. It is also natural for you to desire to benefit in a major way this university that has benefited you so much through the training and education you or your loved ones or friends received here. Therefore, Andrews University has on its staff personnel to assist you in all of your estate needs.

Andrews has three ways to serve you:

Plan No. 1

A personal invitation is extended to you to come to our beautiful campus as our guest on a pre-arranged appointment basis to visit and renew old acquaintance and memories, to get first hand a view of the progress and learn of the challenges for the future and at the same time sit down in the privacy of our development office with one or more of our professionals trained to serve you in your estate needs and charitable planning. While you are here, you are a guest of the university. If you are coming from a distance and require a night's lodging here, we will even arrange for guest room facilities for you. You see, bequests represent the final demonstration of affection and appreciation for Andrews University. The students and faculty desire to return appreciation and affection to you as you plan and make provision for the future of this, your institution of higher learning.

Plan No. 2

At your request, one of our professional development representatives will be happy to visit you at your convenience in your home. You will receive the same courteous and competent service as if you visited our campus.

Plan No. 3

Many of our alumni and friends find they are served to their satisfaction by telephone and personal correspondence.

Whichever plan you would enjoy the most and be most comfortable participating in is the best one for you. Most individuals desire Plans 1 and 2 because of the complexity of the service required. You may arrange for assistance by calling (616) 471-3592 or writing to Director of Development, Andrews University, Berrien Springs, Michigan 49104.

Please note: Every person serving you from Andrews recognizes the individual preferences in estate distribution. You may desire to include in your plan in addition to your loved ones several charities that have been meaningful to you with Andrews as one of them. This is very common. Our personnel are just as happy to serve you whether you desire to remember only one charity or several. You see, Andrews is still just as willing to serve you now as when you were a student seeking professional training.

Arrange now for the plan you would prefer so you may experience the peace of mind and the personal joy that automatically accompanies such responsible future planning.

Suggested Names Needed for New Men's Dorm

Charles A. Burman served Emmanuel Missionary College from 1920 to 1935 as Dean of Men. On April 17, 1940, a men's residence hall was named for him. An era will come to an end when that building will be closed in June, 1981, and razed to make way for the new College of Technology complex. We are uncertain as to whether his name should be attached to the new residence hall. Some feel that it should be retired with his building. Some have suggested other names. The alumni of Andrews University are invited to submit suggestions for a name for the new men's residence hall. Please send me your proposal by February 15, 1981. Your opinion will be valued.

Phonathon to Boost BECA Campaign

Andrews University will be conducting a telephone campaign in selected areas of the country beginning in January, 1981. The purpose of this program, according to David H. Bauer, vice president for development and public relations, will be to solicit the support of the Andrews alumni family in meeting the Business Executives' Challenge to Alumni (BECA) Fund for their alma mater. The campaign will be coordinated through the alumni office by Ralph M. Coupland, executive director of the alumni association, with the assistance of members of the alumni board of directors, students and other alumni volunteers. Your response to our efforts will be greatly appreciated.

What a Gang!

I'd like to call your attention to a mistake on page 42 (of the Summer 1980 issue). I'm John Ernest Monteith MA '50 from the old seminary. Thanks for remembering me among the alumni. I got my BA from McMaster University while teaching in the city of Hamilton.

You mentioned one of my hobbies. I also grow flowers and vegetables and exhibit where I can. I received a check from Leamington Fair for thirty dollars. I made 18 entries with flowers and won six firsts, three seconds, five thirds, and two fourths. I turn my winnings in for investment. I had 250 gladioli and 42 varieties of dahlias. I'm very proud of these. Today, two members of the Windsor Camera Club photographed almost all my dahlias. I plan to increase the number of varieties of dahlias.

I like to read, and since I graduated in Greek and Hebrew I decided about three years ago to read the New Testament in Greek. I have now read it all once, but Luke. I have also read several of the new translations of the Bible and like N.I. Version best.

In a nursing home in Chatham, Ontario is a lady named Agnes Stewart Pangburn. She attended Battle Creek College in the late 1890s and on June 29, 1980 observed her 100th birthday. I managed to have her remembered on the weekly program Fresh Air on the CBC radio. Friends in the Chatham church honored her one Sabbath and I understand some of her Stewart relatives surprised her on her actual birthday. She had no children and one sister who died unmarried, so has no close relatives. She was the third church school teacher in Ontario's first church school 1901-03.

FOCUS is a fine paper and I enjoy its contents. I was sorry to read about Beth Wilkins. She was a little girl when I taught at EMC, but she always took the trouble to make herself known when I visited the Andrews campus.

Kindly convey to your predecessor (Opal Hoover Young) my sympathy on the loss of her husband.

I should mention that I attended the seminary when such individuals as Don T. Neufeld, Norval Pease, Siegfried Horn, Thomas Blincoe and T. H. Jemison were students. What a gang to compete against!

So Interesting

The FOCUS magazine is so interesting to me. I especially enjoy the notes and pictures of the alumni. There are very few left that were at EMC when I was.

Those days were such happy days and friends made there have made my life richer.

Our children went there and we have enjoyed them and their friends so much through the years.

Behind every challenge, a vision

The vision, almost always, precedes the challenge, breaking ground for new work to be done. So it is at Andrews, with an exciting challenge recently issued to the university's alumni.

The Business Executives' Challenge to Alumni (BECA) has announced a program that could generate up to $750,000 of new money for Andrews during the next five years—if certain levels of participation in the Alumni Fund drive are met.

BECA, the $2-million, five-year challenge fund to stimulate alumni giving, will more than double the value of your $100, $50, or $25 unrestricted gift. The program is an incentive to you, members of the Andrews University Alumni Association, to increase—on a continuing basis—the number of alumni who support the university. Currently, the percentage of participation at Andrews is more than 10 percent, well below the national average of 25 percent. The goal of the BECA program is to increase participation to that national average.

The group of business leaders who conceived the grant are expressing their confidence in the pursuit of a higher standard of excellence at Andrews. Will you accept the challenge and reaffirm your belief in the educational experience which made you what you are today and holds the key to the training of tomorrow's leaders? The vision already exists . . . one of a university made stronger and more excellent by its alumni. Invest in your college: excellence is on the line!

Bible religion is to be interwoven with all we do or say. Divine and human agencies are to combine in temporal as well as in spiritual achievements. COL 349

To every student I would say, Never rest satisfied with a low standard. In attending school, be sure that you have in view a noble, holy object. Go because you desire to fit yourselves for service in some part of the Lord's vineyard. Do all that you can to attain this object. You can do more for yourselves than anyone can do for you. CT 218
