BRI to Study Principles of Biblical Interpretation

The Biblical Research Institute (BRI) is conducting further study on Adventist principles of biblical interpretation. The study has gained further importance as a response to the differing interpretations used during the recent General Conference session discussion on women’s ordination. BRI has already published at least two books on the issue, including Understanding Scripture: An Adventist Approach, edited by George W. Reid, and Interpreting Scripture: Bible Questions and Answers, edited by Gerhard Pfandl. Read more from the Adventist Review online.

Departing Adventists Impress San Antonio Airport Staff

When tens of thousands of worldwide Adventists flooded San Antonio, Texas, during the first two weeks of July, some in the city predicted traffic jams and frayed tempers. And, they worried the relatively small airport would be overwhelmed when everyone left following the General Conference Session. What they didn't expect, was the gracious spirit exhibited by so many, even when exceedingly long lines formed at the airport. One agent stopped an Adventist in the concourse and told him that in 16 years, he'd never seen such an orderly, peaceful group. Adventist Health Named "Most Wired" for 2015

Adventist Health is included with more than 300 hospitals or health systems listed as healthcare's "most wired" in a national survey announced earlier this month. The survey analyzed data from roughly 40 percent of the nation's hospitals in achieving its results. It's Not About Forgiveness

Pastors and principals in Adventist Christian institutions would love to avoid the reality of legal litigation. But in today’s world, it is unavoidable. For many, involvement will come in a domestic case where testimony from a teacher, principal or pastor will be sought by one or both sides in a divorce or custody battle. For others, exposure to this world will come when members sue each other over a contract, an injury, or an abuse matter. It is difficult to offer spiritual guidance to people involved in a lawsuit. Many times all parties in a lawsuit are members of the same church family. What counsel is best, what principles should we follow?
