A MERE GLANCE AT primetime TV program-
ning is enough to convince any broad-minded viewer that there is a twisted imagination at the helm of visual media. Without going into detail, it suffices to say that the TV has become an educator in all things immoral — known and unknown. Even the hardest of us cringe at the things we see, and our flesh creeps at what we think we might see. On a nightly basis a campaign is conducted for the purpose of convincing souls that this is the way the world rolls; and if it doesn’t, it should. A politically-incorrect set of values is touted as entertainment for the thinking adult.

Parents who allow the TV or the Internet to educate their children ought not be surprised at the surprises their children bring back to the table. And for some parents it really doesn’t matter; this is the world their kids have to function in, so go get a job and figure it out.

There are also parents out there who have a different set of values than their neighbors. This may be the world in which their children have to grow up; but they don’t have walk to the beat of the same drummer. Fit in — but don’t get swallowed up. Let’s face it, even Jesus had a job. But the salvation of souls was never dependent upon how well anyone could use a hammer or a chisel. Jesus’ disciples were well able to earn a crust, but they weren’t called because they were good fishermen or tent-makers. Neither were they called because they had it all figured out.

Those of us looking for better brain food are invited to visit ThePerfectStormIsComing.org where can be found food of a different — healthful — sort: free eBooks to read or download; Selected Sabbath Sermons (old and new) which may be watched online or downloaded as MP3 files to take with you wherever you can take your player. Those of us with iPhones should be aware that a growing list of presentations is available for watching right in the palm of the hand. Parents — grandparents — might make some of these things available for their children to chew on during downtime; they won’t regret it. The kids are plugged into something; have a say in what is available for them to listen to.

Life is too short — and precious — to fritter away on stuff that amounts to less than nothing. Visit today; tell us what you liked, and what you’d like to see more of.
