A Partnership with God
Our partnership with God involves much more than time, money, or talent. The Bible uses family relationships, and the language reserved for the intimate oneness of husband and wife, to describe the partnership God wants to have with us. However it may be described or understood, this partnership is formed by choice and consummated by action, as illustrated by Nathan Greene in our watercolor cover.

“Time, Temple, Talent, and Treasure”—I remember the first time I heard this phrase and the accompanying term, “systematic benevolence.” I thought, “Yeah, the church has invented a new way to get money out of me.” But the Lord is such a great and patient Teacher that He did not leave me in the dark for very long. I was to learn that the contributor to the Lord’s house, whether it be his time in service, his body-temple preservation, his gifts of talent, or his treasure through tithe and offerings, always receives more than he gives. It is still true that “you just can’t beat God giving.”

And so it is a privilege to give to the Lord, and watch how He multiplies our meager offerings. If we give of our time, and by that I mean committing ourselves to service beyond the sacred hours of the Sabbath, we reap rich rewards.

Well-known talk show hostess, Oprah Winfrey, calls it R.A.K. (Random Acts of Kindness). This is service rendered to others, with no thought of receiving anything in return. Now that’s a Christian principle if I ever heard one.

Then there is the temple. Our own bodies are to be the temple of the Holy Spirit, a place wherein God loves to dwell. In making our body-temples a comfortable place for the indwelling Spirit by temperance, abstinence, and healthy diet, we will also be better prepared to meet and minister to others. Body-temple stewardship will also make us more loving and easier to relate to family and friends.

When it comes to talent, the biblical parable of the talents says it all. In the common vernacular of today we would say, “Use it or lose it.” Good stewardship of our talents allows God to bestow more on us because we will have been proven trustworthy.

As a young boy, I remember a lady who had a marvelous talent as a pianist. But the church members and officers always had to beg her to play in church. A few years after she moved to another city she returned to visit. She was asked to play. She sadly confessed, “I can no longer play the piano. I refused so many times to use my talent for the Lord that He took it from me.” What a pity! God is the giver of every good and perfect gift, and He has a right to require those talents back in useful service.

And finally, there is treasure. All right, I confess, tithing does not work out on a calculator or a computer. The only way you can have more by giving away more is in God’s system. In His system we actually “add by subtracting, and multiply by dividing.” If you haven’t already, try it, you’ll like it!
Evangelism is in the air with many Hope for Our Day meetings taking place. Great Lakes Adventist Academy (GLAA) faculty are excited their students are also involved in spreading the gospel.

Christina McNeilus and Brad Smith, GLAA seniors, began an evangelistic campaign October 1, 2004, on the campus of Central Michigan University (CMU) in Mt. Pleasant, Michigan. Over 75 GLAA students are working with them—greeting the visitors, providing music, and helping out in many ways.

So, how did this get started? Seeing examples of young people active for Christ, Denzil McNeilus, Christina’s father, approached GLAA last year with the idea for a student-led evangelistic campaign. The enthusiastic staff launched plans last fall. With more than 28,000 students, CMU was fertile ground for the Bible workers who prepared the way there since July 1.

Located only 30 minutes away, with many young people who need to learn about Christ, the decision was made to hold the meetings there.

The Health Expo, conducted by 50 GLAA students, preceded the first four evangelistic meetings. Led by Cindy Peterson, Bible and health teacher at GLAA, these students trained and practiced for weeks. Guests at the Health Expo visited eight stations, each targeting one of the eight laws of health. They could also have their body fat, lung capacity, blood pressure, cholesterol, and sugar levels tested. Other stations included massage, health age analysis, and the Harvard Step Test. At the final station, an adult was available to review and explain the data.

Christina and Brad feel privileged to be a part of this awesome opportunity. “I am so excited to see everyone working together, but more importantly to see God transform the hearts of the people coming to the meetings, and to see Him make changes in my own life as I reach out to others,” said Christina.

“I am so amazed to see the way the kids at GLAA are supporting us. People come up to me all the time and tell me they are praying for us. That is really encouraging! I know that the Lord is going to bless, not only at CMU, but also at GLAA,” Brad stated.

Christina and Brad have both been involved in the ASI Youth for Jesus program, giving evangelistic series in Cincinnati, Ohio, and in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Mickey Mallory, Cedar Lake pastor and outreach project coordinator, stated, “The history of our church demonstrates that God can do incredible things through young people. With the second coming of Christ very near, one would expect God to use young people in an extraordinary way to help finish His work on earth.”

We know the students of GLAA will be blessed through these efforts, but we also pray that the enthusiasm these young people have for Jesus will catch on and light a fire for Him on the campus of CMU.

Father in heaven” (Matt. 10:32 NIV).

Oscar was baptized by Hinsdale youth pastor, Kenneth Parker Jr., on May 29. By God’s grace, Oscar’s goal is to be an example to others and he hopes to lead at least one person into the joy of serving Jesus Christ. How thankful we are for the benefits of Christian education, which is used by God to both educate our children and lead them into a new spiritual relationship and the promise of eternal life.

Illinois

Oscar Ontiveros, a senior at Hinsdale Adventist Academy, grew up in Illinois. He attended an Adventist church and school until completing the fourth grade. After that year, he stopped attending his childhood church and enrolled in the public school system. This year he came back to Hinsdale Adventist Academy and had a life-changing experience.

During the annual Week of Prayer services conducted by Kent Nichols, a Hinsdale (Illinois) Church elder, Oscar responded to the compelling messages that spoke to his heart and soul. He surrendered his life to Christ because the Bible says, “Whoever acknowledges me before men, I will also acknowledge him before my Father in heaven.”

Indiana

Sabbath, July 17, was a high Sabbath for the Cicero (Indiana) Church family as they witnessed the results of the Holy Spirit speaking to two hearts in their midst.

Dawn Moore was raised in the Adventist Church and baptized as a teenager, but as she grew older her commitment to Christ and the church began to lessen. Dawn married a young man of another denomination. After the births of their three children, she and her husband, Scott, desired to raise their children in spiritual unity. Dawn attended several different churches with her husband, but nothing seemed to satisfy Dawn’s need for the faith and truth she had grown up with.

Throughout her life, Dawn was blessed to have a father and grandparents who earnestly prayed for her and encouraged her to reunite with the Adventist faith.

When she and Scott moved to Tipton, Indiana, in 1993, Dawn began to attend the Cicero Church. She and her daughter, Rachel, found the church to be warm and friendly, and Rachel was baptized there in 1998.

As time went by, Dawn began to realize more fully that she had not completely given her life to Christ. She began studying the Bible with Paul Yeoman, Cicero associate pastor. Following two series of Bible studies, Dawn decided to seal her renewed commitment with re-baptism.

As Dawn was responding to the wooing of the Holy Spirit, the Spirit was also working on the heart of Maryhelen Zegarra. Maryhelen grew up in Battle Creek, Michigan, and attended Adelphian Academy. After graduation, she received nurse’s training in Fletcher, North Carolina.
Maryhelen drifted away from the church of her youth and stayed away for 20 years. During this period of her life, she felt something was missing.

A couple of years ago, Maryhelen began visiting several Adventist churches in the Indianapolis area. When she visited the Cicero Church, she found its friendly atmosphere and spiritual leadership inviting her to start over. So she began Bible studies, also. Maryhelen wanted to recommit her life to Christ and seal it in the rite of baptism, as a result of the things she learned from God’s Word.

Maryhelen works in the field of inpatient cardiac rehabilitation. And that is just what has happened to her heart—it has been rehabilitated and restored by the Spirit of God!

God stepped into my life when I (Milton Partee) was about to step out of it.

After the delivery of our fourth child, I sat by my wife’s bedside. Something was drastically wrong.

I called the nurse and insisted she call the doctor. Upon examining my wife, the doctor’s face paled and he stated, “I’m afraid your wife’s uterus has ruptured.” A team of specialists arrived soon to help.

Although I had not prayed before, I knelt for nineteen hours pleading with God, “Please don’t let her die.”

The doctors did all they could, but she hemorrhaged to death. I said to myself, “This can’t be happening. She’s only twenty-three, and too young to die.” I was devastated!

As I drove home, I took my anger out on God. “You don’t care. I prayed, and You didn’t answer. From now on I want nothing to do with You,” I accused.

The next few days were a blur. At the funeral Al, an old friend, came to express his sympathy. As we stood by the coffin, he slipped a note in my pocket with his phone number on it and told me to call at any time “because everyone needs a friend at times like this.”

After the funeral my children and I moved in with my parents. I went to work again only to learn the company had been sold, and the new owners wanted their own employees. I’d lost my wife, and now my job. Life was empty.

I was about to leap in front of a passing car when a voice asked, “Why don’t you call Al?” I spun around in surprise, then used a pay phone to call him. I began, “Al, I’m not doing very well. Can you help me?” We agreed to meet that night.

After small talk, Al asked if I’d ever read the Bible. I hadn’t, so he began to share some passages. He read Matthew 11:28, which included Jesus’ invitation—“Come to me, all you who are burdened, and I will give you rest.” That’s what I needed—rest. I asked how I might find rest. Al said it was mine for the asking, but there was another matter I should care for first.

He took me down the Romans road: “All have sinned” (Romans 3:23); “The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life” (Romans 6:23); “If you confess that Jesus is Lord, and believe God raised Him from the death, you will be saved” (Romans 10:9); and, “Everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved” (Romans 10:13).

The Gospel light was shining on me. I bowed, acknowledged my sinfulness, and confessed Jesus as my Lord and Savior. Immediately, I felt Christ come to fill my empty void and I wanted to shout for joy. God had stepped into my life at just the right time. He gave me a whole new life—an abundant life now, and a future life in Heaven.

I was baptized on February 7, 2004, and became a member of the Clare (Michigan) Church.

Discovering Your New Family Roots

BY ANN FISHER

Americans who know nothing about George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and the other founding fathers of this country cannot appreciate the debt we owe to these individuals. Similarly, no Adventist who is unfamiliar with names like William Miller, Joseph Bates, Hiram Edson, Uriah Smith, and James and Ellen White will fully appreciate what it means to be an Adventist. For as Kierkegaard, the Danish philosopher, once said, “Life must be lived forwards, but can only be understood backwards.”

The Millerite Movement

William Miller (1782–1849) was one of the most unlikely candidates to lead a great Christian revival. Although his mother was a deeply committed Baptist and his grandfather and uncle were both Baptist preachers, young William turned away from his family’s Christian faith. An avid reader who spent hours in front of the fireplace late at night with books by Jefferson, Franklin, Thomas Paine, and other early American authors, William accepted their belief in the existence of God as revealed by reason and nature alone, but not by supernatural revelation. He eventually rejected the Scriptures and became an avowed skeptic.

After serving in the War of 1812, William moved his family to Low Hampton, New York, where he hoped to live quietly as a farmer. But William was not at peace with himself. In 1816, he accepted a challenge that would dramatically change his life.

William had always argued that Christians could not “know” the Bible was the Word of God; yet it suddenly occurred to him that without a careful study of Scripture, he was in no position to “know” that the Bible was not God’s Word. For the next two years, William made a serious study of the entire Bible, was convinced that it must be a revelation from God, and accepted Jesus Christ as his personal Savior.

With the aid of a concordance, William continued to study the Bible diligently for the next 13 years. Fascinated by the Scriptures’ prophetic passages, particularly in the book of Daniel, he became convicted that Daniel 8:14, which he believed pointed to the second coming of Christ, would soon be fulfilled. But he hesitated to share his conclusion for fear that his interpretation might be wrong.

After years of research and prayer, William became convicted God was calling him to preach this prophetic message in the churches. In spite of his fear of public speaking, William vowed in August 1831 to preach his message only if he were specifically invited to do so. He was sure no one would invite a 50-year-old farmer with no training or experience to preach. But within an hour of the time he made his deal with God, William received a specific invitation to preach at the local Baptist church.

For the next eight years William accepted every invitation he could, and by the fall of 1839, the Millerite revival began to gain national momentum. William Miller became a household name across America. It was not unusual for Millerite camp meetings to draw crowds as large as 10,000 people.

When the Lord did not return between the spring of 1843 and the spring of 1844 as the Millerites had hoped, they reexamined their interpretation and settled on October 22, 1844, a day corresponding to the Jewish Day of Atonement, as the day that Jesus would return. The final months before October 22 were filled with prayer, sacrifice, and joy. Many quit their jobs and sold their possessions to spread the good news of Christ’s return.

But like the early disciples who were devastated by crucifixion Friday, the Millerites were destined to experience what came to be known as the “Great Disappointment.” (To be continued in the next issue)

On July 19, three Pioneer Memorial Church members left Berrien Springs, Michigan, for Romania to coordinate a FLAG (Fun Learning About God) camp for children in two REACH homes there. REACH International, Inc., is a non-profit charity operated by Seventh-day Adventists in 23 countries worldwide. Each day, over 23,000 children are served by this organization (see www.reach.org).

our prayers with eight wonderful volunteers. These young adults were able to communicate with the children and also helped as our translators.

Glenn Russell shared themes from the Beatitudes each morning, setting the tone for each day. This was followed by a blast from his whistle, calling the children to line up for roll call. A mad scurry ensued as children anxiously ran outside to line up in five groups. The groups were arranged mostly by age and each had an adult Romanian leader. Brightly-colored bandanas were worn to give each group identity.

After breakfast, the groups rotated through five stations—Bible lessons, music, physical activity, crafts, and nature/science. Glenn coordinated the camp activities and the first three stations were taught by Romanians. Aurora Burdick taught crafts, and I taught nature/science. Aurora’s son from California, Emanuel, helped with the activities. The program was fast-paced and lots of fun for the children.

The afternoons gave us time to mix with the children and staff and we forged new relationships. There were many hugs, opportunities to play ping-pong, and football (soccer in the United States) with the children. There was also time to take the children to the local swimming pool and to experience a trip to the Danube.

The children participated with a Peretu church choir in a vespers musical program where Narchisa Radu, age 14, recited Isaiah 53 from memory as other children hummed softly, lending a worshipful air to the closing of the Sabbath.

Our last two days were spent at the REACH home in Mislea. While there, we went on a short trip with the older children into the beautiful mountainous region south of Brasov.

The children had an insatiable hunger for love and attention. It was not uncommon for two or three children to pile on our laps as we rode in the van. They are fortunate to be in a loving atmosphere, compared to the myriads of street children who have no home. It was hard to say goodbye, but we all look forward to seeing these children again.

When people spend their lives trying to transform or fix their spouses and kids, the natural result is exhaustion, depression, and the hopeless sense of wanting to bail out of it all. Christian writer, Jeff VanVonderen, suggests that God’s grace can transform relationships within a marriage and family. He says, “The first step is learning the simple difference between God’s job and ours. God’s part is to fix and change. Our responsibility is to depend on the Holy Spirit, serve our families, and help equip them to be all they can be. The Christian family’s ultimate goals of harmony, obedience, and full potential can be arrived at without using legalistic and manipulative methods.”

Jeff shares his experience with a dedicated, well-meaning Christian father who often sacrificed his own comfort and needs to help someone else or to work for some higher goal. When problems came up he directed them to do what he did by saying, “Quit complaining. When you focus on a problem, you become a problem. Just do the right thing. It doesn’t matter whether you like it or not. The Kingdom of God is not a democracy.”

It wasn’t until his wife checked herself into a mental health facility with symptoms of a physical and emotional collapse, and his children revealed that he made them feel like they were never going to be good enough, that he began to reexamine the way he was living his Christian life. He realized he had been legalistic and harsh. He believed with all his heart that the Bible was true—but there was something missing in the way he had been taught to apply biblical principles. “I always thought I was doing the loving and right thing by directing my family to just act on godly principles. I thought that doing and obedience were the simple answers to all our needs and problems. I didn’t see that I was making them perform right on the outside, while inside their hearts were still aching for real compassion. If I’d given them the compassion first, as a foundation to stand on, they would have had more real power inside.”

He is one of many Christian men and women who were taught that spiritual life results from performing according to certain principles. He gaged spiritual success by outward performance standards, and had not given his family the emotional and spiritual fuel to get them through life’s challenges.

This father came to realize that denying a problem only prolonged it and strained relationships. He learned that “fixing” his spouse and children only led to disappointment and distancing in the relationship. By not allowing himself to submit to the discomfort of honest dialogue, he could not understand the hearts of his family members. This father accepted God’s grace and began offering it to his wife and children. It was then he became free from the burden of pressuring, controlling, and manipulating his spouse and children. Praise God!

Our doorbell rang at 11:45 p.m. Sunday night. That’s abnormal, even for us late-nighters. I climbed out of bed and snuck to the front door. There, standing under the porch light, was a pirate! His T-shirt featured a skull and crossbones, he was smoking a fiery cigarette, his tattoos rippled across his muscles, and his face was festooned with silver piercings. Ear, ear, nose, eyebrow ... and his red beard was a gnarly Fu Manchu.

As I peered through the small “see what’s out there” window, I saw him take another drag on the cigarette, flick the ash off into mom’s flowers, and then smile. What to do? I reviewed the options quickly: turn off the light, call 911, or open the door and invite him in.

I called out, in as strong a voice as I could muster, “What can I do for you?” Redbeard leaned down, picked up a Toro leaf blower, and held it out toward me. “You left your leaf blower on your lawn, and I didn’t want anybody to steal it from you.” His words processed slowly through my worried brain.

I told the story to my friend, Emory, as we covered Hurricane Frances’ damages on a friend’s roof. He laughed, put down his hammer, and told me about the demon. Emory, it seems, was taking a theater make-up class and was on his way to his final test when the car behind him slammed into his bumper at a stoplight. Frustrated at the delay, Emory got out to talk to the driver, who turned out to be a 90-lb., 75-yr-old lady on her way to church.

There, under a streetlight, Emory suddenly remembered the test. The test required full facial make-up, and Emory was a demon—complete with wonderful little pointy horns! Emory was in full face, and she was terrified! He was as kind as a demon could be.

She apologized (wide-eyed) again and again, and the two of them agreed to the “no harm, no foul” rule of bumper relationships. The tiny Sunday school teacher didn’t smile as she quickly retreated to her car—and rolled up all the windows.

Emory and I sat on the roof and laughed, and laughed, and laughed. Somehow it made the rest of the work easier. “So,” God says, “rather than worry about what others look like, worry about the memory they take from an encounter with you” (see Romans 14:13).

Along with nicotine, caffeine is the most widely-used stimulant in the world. Estimates vary, but approximately 90% of Americans consume caffeine in some form every day. More than half consume over 300 mg of caffeine every day. Most get their caffeine from coffee, although caffeinated soft drink consumption is dramatically increasing.

Regardless of its source, caffeine tolerance and addiction occur quickly. Eight expert substance abuse clinicians randomly sampled 162 caffeine users for clinical measures of dependence and abuse. They found that 91% of the respondents exhibited dependence-like behavior to caffeine, with 56% reporting a “strong desire or unsuccessful attempt to stop” using it. Their results suggest “a substantial proportion of caffeine users exhibit dependence-like behaviors.”

Like typical drugs of abuse, caffeine stimulates the same brain pathways by increasing dopamine in the pleasure centers of the brain—although to a lesser degree. It works on every system of the body affected by the central nervous system. Its chemical action is to block two major braking systems in the body that regulate excitement, wakefulness, and alertness. In short, it blocks adenosine receptors in the brain to make you feel alert, injects stress hormones into the system to induce energy, and manipulates dopamine to make you feel good.

But that quick pick-me-up has its down side. Tolerance and dependence occur quickly, even within days. The long-term effects of repeated caffeine stimulation are fatigue, depression, irritability, mental fog, the jitters, and loss of quality sleep. This leaves you craving more, quickly creating a vicious cycle of dependence. Eating right, exercising, getting plenty of rest, stress management, and drinking plenty of fresh water increase mental strength, overall energy, improve mood and mental processing, and enhance immune function and emotional health.

Caffeine addiction is a form of bondage that begins early in life, usually in the form of soft drinks. The high intake of sugar, phosphoric acid, and caffeine are not good for bones, brain, or body—and addiction is just as real in the young as in older people.

What to do:

- Admitting you have a problem is the first step to solving it.
- Get help. Beating addiction often requires a full range of medical, spiritual, and social support.
- Fight smart. Deal with all addictions. Caffeine reinforces the effects of other drugs. It increases the effects of nicotine. Tobacco use can stimulate cravings for alcohol, and vice versa.

Solomon said a threefold cord is not easily broken. In this case, the threefold cord of alcohol, nicotine, and caffeine forms a noose. But you can be free. According to Paul, the kindness and love of God frees us from being slaves to our passions and pleasures (addictions) by rebirth and renewal through His Spirit.

The Michigan Conference encouraged church leaders to use the LifeStyle Matters materials for community outreach, leading up to Hope for Our Day this fall.

When Jackson (Michigan) Church members held their first LifeStyle Matters seminar on diet and stress last April at their community service center, they felt successful because more than 25 people attended.

But when they held their second seminar, “Foods for Thought,” in August with seminar developer Vicki Griffin as presenter, they were excitedly overwhelmed when 170 non-Adventists attended the event.

Throughout the four-session seminar the numbers remained steady. The room was so full church members were politely asked to either stand at the back or refrain from attending to make room for the non-Adventists.

Dennis Benedict, a physician and Jackson Church personal ministries leader, coordinated the effort and says he believes “having the seminar at a neutral site, securing a great group of people who worked as a ‘team,’ outstanding marketing/promotion, and developing a mission statement,” led to its success.

The seminar was held at the county’s largest medical facility, W.A. Foote Hospital, selected because it brought a degree of credibility. When approaching hospital administration for use of their auditorium, Benedict stressed the program’s mission statement—“Helping as many people as possible with their health concerns.”

The large auditorium was secured, free of charge, and then Benedict asked the church for volunteers to help. More than 20 individuals volunteered in their areas of expertise. Marketing and promotion was headed by Ray Hamblin, Jackson’s head elder. Sixteen-thousand brochures were mailed to selected zip codes in the city, press releases were published, and display ads ran for three days. The area’s 20-largest employers were visited by trained church members, who offered free posters and brochures for employees. Not one site refused the materials!

As calls poured in, registration reached more than 140, far exceeding original estimates of 50 registrants. The food team had to quadruple recipes to serve everyone adequately. Gene Hall, Jackson Church pastor, actually made two trips to Berrien Springs to pick up more workbooks.

On opening night the Jackson team was ready and waiting!

When guests arrived they were led to beautifully-displayed sample foods to taste, and to a display table with colorful workbooks, many cookbooks, and other health-related publications available for purchase. These sales generated funds to help with seminar costs.

Bob Ritzenthaler, seminar host, said: “I am thrilled to be a part of this successful outreach. The ‘Foods for Thought’ module is first-class and professional. Any church could put this on.”

One attendee asked Benedict why this information was not more widely available, especially in the public schools. This idea prompted the church to consider presenting programs to other groups in the city.

So what made this seminar so successful? The Jackson team believes their mission statement says it all—“Help as many people as possible with their health concerns.” The numbers speak for themselves! (See p. 10 for Lifestyle Matters information.)

Madlyn Hamblin is a member of the Jackson Church.
Let’s Talk About the Good Life

How well did your family of origin communicate? How well does your family communicate now? Do you have the skills to help you or your family members face a personal or health-related crisis, or to offer support to a loved one in long-term care?

“Communication is a vehicle to nurture one’s family, and good communication skills help family members face a crisis together. If you nurture each other, and develop communication skills in affirmative ways, talking about more serious matters becomes easier.”

“The Making of the Good Life” was a seminar taught by Larry Yeagley—a retired pastor, hospice chaplain, author, and man with a heart for teaching communication skills to the family of God—during a recent Spiritual Emphasis Week at GlenOaks Hospital in Glendale Heights, Ill. His topic was well-received and worth sharing with Lake Union Herald readers.

“I’ve seen many patients come to critical or palliative care units without medical directives. I’d ask the family, ‘What are your mother or father’s wishes?,’ and they didn’t know. Families should encourage loved ones to write out advance directives and talk about them.” Yeagley added, “However, good communication should begin long before a health crisis occurs.” Yeagley offers three steps to build better family communication:

Demonstrate Appreciation

“Appreciation is the starting point for healthy communication. Everyone needs embraces. Find the strong points in your children and work off those points, affirming them in their strengths. Appreciation is emotional nutrition. Find opportunities to give affirmation to others every day,” said Yeagley. “Appreciated people show concern for others, are spiritually inclined, and more satisfied with life.”

Build Trust

“Create a home where children bring their friends. Children are less likely to rebel in a home where their friends are welcome. In this atmosphere, develop trust with your children as well as their friends. Encourage each other to express emotions in a healthy manner. Children model their parents, so parents hold the key to the emotional stability of future generations.”

Spend Time Together

“Do things together. This strengthens communication, provides a shared foundation, and lots of opportunities for conversation. Take time for each other and develop friendships. If you are not friends, you cannot understand each other emotionally,” notes Yeagley. “Discuss the differences of being alone and lonely. Activities done in solitude can be constructive, i.e., playing music, artistic endeavors, and reading. One becomes lonely when deprived of sufficient relationships. Chronic loneliness can lead to health problems.”

Yeagley encouraged listeners to remember God showers His children with unconditional love to teach us forgiveness. “Forgiveness is an eternal provision and like a water supply, if we tap into it, we have the ability to give it to others.”

According to Yeagley, “communication in families and the family of God will improve when people participate in multi-generational worship and activities.” He thinks churches should offer family resource centers to help families learn communication skills. Yeagley also recommends seasoning the gospel message with “therapeutic preaching” to teach families how to “express grief, show emotions, and nurture one another.”

Larry Yeagley discusses the “Good Life” during Spiritual Emphasis Week at GlenOaks Hospital in Glendale Heights, Ill. The event served 1,731 people and received praise for its thoughtful way “to bring spirituality into the daily routine of employees.” Yeagley also presented “Caring for the Dying” at several locations within the Midwest Region, which shared meaningful hospice experiences to help professionals, family, and staff make informed end-of-life care decisions.
Let’s Talk ... Again

Andrews University hosted Let’s Talk ... Again on Monday, Sept. 13, 2004. The “no-holds-barred” conversation-style session between Jan Paulsen, General Conference president, and 50 students, ages 20–25, convened in the university’s new Howard Performing Arts Center. The hour-long show was broadcast live, worldwide, via the Hope Channel and Adventist Television Network. This is the second broadcast instigated in an effort to increase communication between young people and the leaders of the Adventist Church. Last year, Paulsen met with 50 teenagers at the first Let’s Talk.

Young people make up 70% of the Adventist Church, and they are concerned about what their participation in the church is supposed to look like. Paulsen opened the discussion with his answer to the skeptical question no one wanted to ask, “What’s the point?” He said, “You may be asking yourself, ‘Will my question even matter?’” Students waited intently for his response. He leaned in and smiled as he remarked, “Well, it depends on what your question is.” They shared a laugh, and he continued. Paulsen managed to keep the discussion lively, while still maintaining the seriousness of the atmosphere.

Students offered a range of questions as broad as competitive sports, women’s roles, war, race-relations, and homosexuality. Yes, these are Adventist young people and these are the cutting-edge issues they have to face at large, in their families, in the job market—all over the world. Paulsen counseled them to “look after yourself spiritually and search for creative ways to be involved in the life of your church, ... The church cannot afford to have observers. She simply cannot afford it.”

The students emphatically agreed with the same eager spirit that is in keeping with the very dictum of their university: Seek Knowledge. Affirm Faith. Change the World. For more information and a transcript of the conversation, log onto www.letstalk.adventist.org.

New University Relations Director Appointed

Rebecca L. May joined the Andrews University Office of University Relations staff as their new director on Monday, Sept. 13.

Her new responsibilities encompass the areas of community, media, and church relations, as well as inter-campus communication.

Though she is taking on a new position, May is not new to Andrews. Since 1986, she has served the university as Alumni Services director, where she organized a variety of events and services for current students and 28,000 alumni.

“After 18 years, of course there is much nostalgia leaving the Alumni House,” May stated. “But a new person in Alumni Services will bring some fresh energy, a healthy change, and new ideas.”

May is actually making a return to the Office of University Relations, where she served as office manager from 1979–1984 and public information officer in 1985.

She is an alumna of Andrews herself, having received a bachelor of arts in French with a journalism minor in 1977.

“Christian education at Andrews University is my passion. I feel fortunate that my new responsibilities will be closely related to my work in Alumni; [I am] still working in University Advancement, but with new challenges serving different constituencies of Andrews University. I look forward to the opportunities for professional and personal growth through these new challenges, particularly in the areas of community and church relations.”

Barbara Taylor believes in doing good business. She also believes in sharing her faith. The Copper Mountain, Colorado, Seventh-day Adventist has found a way to do both. “We not only take care of work, we go out as Christians and share Christ,” she recently told a newspaper reporter in Cincinnati, Ohio. The link to a religious Web site printed on the back of her business card sometimes opens the door for witnessing.

Taylor, the president of Between U-N-Me, Inc., a men’s sportswear wholesale company, was one of nearly 2,000 people who attended the 57th Annual Adventist-Laymen’s Service and Industries (ASI) Convention in August where more than $2.33 million was collected in offering to help fund the projects and ministries of 43 organizations.

Attendees to the convention, who come from all walks of life, different parts of North America and beyond, and who represent for-profit and non-profit organizations, have two things in common—they’re business- and ministry-minded Seventh-day Adventists.

Mark Black, a building contractor from Seattle, Washington, looks for any opportunity to witness—carrying his Bible on plane trips, displaying religious books in his office, and offering prayer at business lunches. “Not including sending e-mail Bible studies, I give about three to four Bible studies a day,” he says.

Todd Rhoades, the 23-year-old owner of T & T Masonry in Chestertown, Maryland, is a new ASI member who, while still growing in his personal faith, is already finding ways to minister to the needs of others. He volunteers with recovering alcoholics and mentally impaired patients, and is working with a group of students to start a public campus ministry at the University of Maryland.

John Chung, a dermatologist from Dalton, Georgia, began giving Bible studies to his patients after hours several years ago. He now has 20 to 50 people studying each week.

The enthusiasm of these active members, who seek opportunities to minister while doing business, is a common trait of ASI members—very likely what the founders of the association envisioned when they established the organization who’s motto is “Sharing Christ in the Marketplace.”

Grassroots Support for Mission Work

It was 57 years ago that representatives of self-supporting ministries gathered in Cincinnati with Adventist leaders to form an organization that would promote missionary enterprises. From the beginning, the annual convention and mission work were critical objectives. In 1970, the first mission offering, which totaled $2,017, added a new dimension to the organization. The money went to help a medical clinic, college, and ministry with financial needs.
The offerings grew slowly until Tom Zapara and Harold Lance challenged fellow members to do better. They answered the call, giving $80,000 in 1981. In 1999, a high point of more than $4.5 million was collected and used to support mission work around the world.

The grassroots association continues to grow and thrive with nearly 1,000 members. Doreen Schmidt, of the Eastlex Machine Corporation in Lexington, Kentucky, and ASI vice president for recruitment, says that over 120 new members joined during the last year.

Program Highlights

As August rolled around, members—new and old—left their homes, schools, jobs, ministries, and businesses, and came to the convention to network at 275 exhibit booths and enjoyed vegetarian and vegan meals.

They came to learn through workshops on witnessing, giving Bible studies, customer service, and health outreach. They came to hear numerous testimonies of how fellow lay members have brought people to Christ and how those receiving funds have furthered the gospel. And they came to worship and be inspired by keynote speakers who, following this year’s theme, called them to realize it’s really “Christ’s Power ... Our Hands” that make the difference.

Sabbath speaker, Shawn Boonstra of It Is Written, encouraged attendees to be ready for a divine appointment to witness for God. “You can’t believe in Bible prophecy without believing that God has put you in His schedule as He moves with certainty towards the Second Coming,” he preached.

Youth Do Their Part

While the adults were inspired by speakers and testimonies, the youth were not to be left behind. Several hundred from “tiny tots” to young adults accompanied their parents and enjoyed programs and various evangelistic activities.

Sixty earliteens canvassed the city, selling over $2,000 in magabooks while 100 teens conducted a free health expo for city residents.

Denise Thomas-Ellis, Columbia Union chapter president, says that attending ASI really compels youth to participate in Christ’s work. She points out 21-year-old Rachel Hyman of Atlanta, Georgia, who just finished a summer as a literature evangelist for the Georgia-Cumberland Conference. Now she intends to become a full-time Bible worker. “I want to help people who are looking for truth understand the Bible and God’s love,” she says, much to the delight of Thomas-Ellis and other ASI leaders.

“Thank you for being committed to your youth and giving them the opportunity of sharing Jesus Christ with the hearts and homes of Cincinnati,” said Chester Clark III, an academy teacher from Arkansas. Clark is ASI’s vice president for youth evangelism, and coordinator of the ASI-funded Youth for Jesus evangelism effort recently conducted in Cincinnati. “It’s truly amazing to see God using young people,” he told the audience while giving a project report.

Clark and his team of 28 reported that during the past year they had reached out to 400,000 people, inviting them to take Bible studies and to attend an evangelism series preached by teens as young as 15. Evangelistic efforts were conducted in seven churches, 90 people were baptized, and 40 more are studying.

At the close of the weekend, when the reports from youth, members in action, exhibitors, and evangelists had ended, Debbie Young, ASI president, challenged members to take their experience home. “Walk away with the inspiration and motivation to share Christ in your marketplace,” she said.

Next year’s ASI convention will be held in Sacramento, August 3–6, 2005. For information visit www.asi.ministries.org or call (301) 680-6450.

A dinner for five at a family restaurant averages about $35. Giving a customary 15 percent tip would add $5.25 to the cost of the meal. If the family ate out once a month, the tip would amount to $63 over the course of a year.

Although we, in the Lake Union, gave the highest mission offerings per capita in 2003, they only amounted to an average of $29.07, less than half of the tips given by our once-a-month dining family.

Giving to world mission offerings has remained flat for decades, while tithe and local giving have increased with inflation. In 1930, members gave 65 percent to missions as compared to tithe. That percentage has plunged to a surprising four percent in the past three quarters of a century. And last year’s mission offering total was the lowest since 1985.1 During the Great Depression, per capita giving to world mission offerings was 17 times what it is today in the Lake Union.

According to Juan Prestol, treasurer of the North American Division, “Adventist baby boomers and other younger members support the church in different ways than their parents.” He goes on to say, “As world mission offerings have declined, there’s been a rapid growth in direct giving, in which contributions are channeled directly to ministries for specific projects with measurable objectives.”2

Although giving directly to specific projects has increased, it has not made up for the loss in giving to missions in general. The sobering questions need to be asked, “Do my Sabbath school offerings for world missions look like cheap tips?” “Am I unwilling to give unless I can maintain control over offering disbursement?”

The life of Jesus is our best example of giving with disinterested benevolence (giving with no strings attached). Giving was a part of who He was. And His giving was not dependent on how the gift would be treated, nor did He give any consideration to how He may personally benefit. David modeled that kind of giving when he gave toward the construction of the temple. He never witnessed the construction, participated in a worship service, or heard music at the temple. He just gave and gave and gave—with no personal benefit in return. Giving to the temple was a gift to God, an act of worship.

And that’s how we should give to world missions. We may never see the results of our sacrifice. Our systematic support of world missions ought to be in proportion to the great resources the Lord has entrusted to us. Our giving should reflect the fact that we are privileged, and have the responsibility to include all of God’s family around the world in the blessings that come to us from Him.

Paul Pellandini is the Michigan Conference Stewardship director.

A number of years ago I heard a story about a man who went to the police station and declared, “I need help with a serious problem. I need to know who owns the house I live in.”

The officer on duty asked, “How long have you lived there?”

“Nine years,” replied the man.

“Nine years, and you don’t know who owns the house you live in? Who do you pay your rent to?”

“I don’t pay rent,” muttered the man, who was becoming decidedly more agitated.

Carefully, the officer eyed him and exclaimed, “Nine years in a house and no rent. Friend, you don’t have a problem—you’ve got a gold mine!”

Angrily, the man shouted, “Oh, yes, I do have a problem! The roof is leaking and I have to locate the owner to demand that he fix it. If he doesn’t, I am moving out. I am not going to put up with such stuff like that.”

Amazing! Astounding! Incredible! Ridiculous!

How could anyone be so dense, so out of touch?

But wait just a minute, my friend. Is it possible that if Nathan, the prophet, were alive today he might look straight at you or me and say, “You’re the one!”

Are possessions important to me? Does it matter who owns the house I live in? The answer to that question may be, “Well, it depends on my attitude about my possessions. It depends on whether I need an attitude adjustment!”

In the book, Love Unlimited, I read that “The love of money, the desire for wealth, is the golden chain that binds [us] to Satan.”

However, there is no question that “Money has great value, because it can do great good. In the hands of God’s children it is food for the hungry, drink for the thirsty, and clothing for the naked.”

When we recognize that “All we possess is the Lord’s and we are accountable to Him for the use we make of it,” and that, in fact, God is the owner of our house and we are just the caretaker, it allows us to put everything into perspective, doesn’t it?

God is the one who has given us the means and power to get wealth—not to glorify ourselves, but to provide “for the necessities of life, in blessing others, and advancing the cause of Christ.”

When it comes right down to it, I’m glad God is the owner of my house. How about you?

Some of our favorite words that Jesus spoke on the subject of giving are: “If you give, you will receive. Your gift will return to you in full measure, pressed down, shaken together to make room for more, and running over. Whatever measure you use in giving—large or small—it will be used to measure what is given back to you” (Luke 6:38 NLT).
In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus describes the blessings of giving. Here are four points to consider.

Compassion

It was compassion that moved Jesus to give. It is His spirit of giving that He wants to instill in each of us. It is His chosen method for imparting blessings to us that come through no other means. Compassion giving can include food, clothing, time, talents, services, resources, and more. Compassion giving meets needs. It meets the needs of people around us, it meets the needs presented by a church active in proclaiming the gospel, and it meets our need to give. Giving protects us from the pitfalls of selfishness. It fosters a heart of compassion.

Compensation

When you keep on giving to God, He keeps on giving back to you. Give more to the Lord, and He gives more back to you. Give. Give much. Give until it helps. Give until you feel you have given your all, then give a little more. It’s that kind of giving that results in full-measure-pressed-down-shaken-together-running-over blessings. God’s scales of compensation are tilted toward us. That should cause us to give with excitement, enthusiasm, and anticipation remembering Christ’s words, “It is more blessed to give than to receive” (Acts 20:35).

Compounding

God compounds our giving. He takes the widow’s mite and accomplishes far more with her little “all” than the token riches of the reluctant wealthy. It works on the same principle as compound interest. As we make a commitment to God in our giving we also will be able to proclaim, as did David, “My cup runneth over” (Psalm 23:5). God desires to shower upon us abundant blessings, blessings that rise to the top of our spiritual cups and overflow into the lives of others. Is your giving relationship with Christ so dynamic that it overflows?

Countering

The last part of our text indicates that God counters our gift—He reciprocates. In other words, God chooses to hold back when we hold back. Or, if we choose to give more, God gives more. The more we give, the more God gives. We cannot out-give God. He measures what we give, how we give, and why we give. He measures the entire process. He looks outwardly and inwardly, individually and collectively. He is seeking partnerships.

In His appeal through the prophet Malachi, God even asks us to prove it—to put Him to the test. He is asking us to enter into a giving relationship with Him.

When my parents gave me my first allowance, they taught me the importance of returning a tithe and giving a freewill offering. It seemed hard to me since I only had a small sum to begin with. Nonetheless, a principle practiced, simply because I was instructed to do so, began to take root in my heart as I experienced God’s principle of multiplying.

I continued the practice through my teen years, but it wasn’t until I was married with two children that my faith was challenged. Through that challenge, I began to understand God’s faithfulness and His promise to multiply our giving. There have been multiple times when returning a faithful tithe meant that we were at zero, financially. However, each time God has been true to His promises by providing unexpected blessings of which we had no prior knowledge, such as a surprise payroll bonus or wage increase from the company I worked for, or refund checks from creditors, or unsolicited cash gifts from people praying for us, or finding over $40 blowing in the street, and the list goes on.

God invites us to prove Him. He wants to give us evidence of the blessings that come from a partnership with Him. I can say from my personal experience that He is faithful. No matter how hard I’ve tried, I cannot outgive God. The more we give to Him, the more He gives back to us.

As we bring closure to the year 2004, let us resolve to enter into and deepen that partnership and giving relationship that God desires, so we might receive the blessings we need and He delights to give.

1. Conferences within the Lake Union have received a total of $38,513,295 through August. This represents a slight increase of $354,965 (0.93%) over the same period in 2003, placing us below the rate of inflation. We praise God for faithful members who continue to give during a slow performance in the economy that has effected the midwest region of America more than any other section of the country. Our commitment is to prayerfully utilize each dollar to maximize the advancement of the gospel throughout our territory.

2. The Lake Union Conference distributes a total of $7.2 million from local conference tithe sharing, North American Division tithe reversions, and donations to: Education, which includes K–12 and Andrews University; Other, which includes Lake Region Conference capital reversions, the North American Division retirement plan, and misc. appropriations; Church, which includes general evangelism, youth programs, and multi-cultural ministries; Support, which includes auditing, group medical, Lake Union Herald, and general administration; and Special, which includes communication, computer systems, religious liberty, and trust services.
No, paying tithe can’t save us—no more than you or I can be saved by any other “good work.” We are simply saved by grace through faith (see Eph. 4:6). However, through tithing, God has provided a living allegory to teach and reassure us of His ability to save His children. Tithing is a beautiful God-given opportunity to experience His grace.
By Malachi’s definition, our tithe already belongs to God. He loans it to us for an opportunity to learn of His faithfulness as we exercise our faith. God promises that if we bring our tithe to His storehouse, He will open the windows of Heaven and pour out blessings beyond our imagination. The question has always been, “Will you and I believe that God can be trusted to do what He says He will do?”

I know of a church that faced a financial dilemma. Small in number, without much money, and in the middle of a building project gone awry, members sold their old church believing they would have sufficient funds to build the new church. They rented the town hall as a temporary meeting place, anticipating they would be worshipping in a beautiful new sanctuary before long. Then, everything that could go wrong did go wrong.

Costs to develop the site began to escalate. A number of other issues began to pop up, turning the project into a financial nightmare. Suddenly, this little group was staring at an additional $250,000 more than anticipated to finish the project.

Month after month, the project stood at a standstill. The little group became restless. Meeting in the town hall was less than desirable, and they became more discouraged.

In an attempt to rescue the project, some began to divert their tithe to the building program. After all, how in the world would it ever get finished otherwise? This continued for months, and then years.

Discouraged with their lack of progress, they came to the conclusion one day that they needed to turn this project over to God. They needed a miracle!

While studying and praying together they were impressed that if they were going to give this project over to God, they were going to have to get serious about following His counsel in Scripture. They began by encouraging each other to return a faithful tithe, according to God’s instructions. This was no doubt counterintuitive since, even with the diverted tithe funds, they had been unable to make ends meet. What would happen to their bills now?

To their surprise, and with no one really understanding how it happened, the building project was soon up and running again. Within a short time it was completed and paid for!

Plain and simple, by diverting their tithe to finish the project, members had adopted a financial “righteousness by works” approach. On their own, they tried to do something that only God could do. The result was failure.

We must come to understand that we have no ability to save ourselves through good works, nor do we have the ability to fund all that God has directed His church to accomplish on our own. Both are fully dependent on God.

Without God, the members were unable to handle the church project. The adopted “works” orientation was leading the church to ruin, just as certain as it will sabotage our journey to the Kingdom. When members decided to return to God’s plan to care for His church, the One who owns the cattle on a thousand hills provided all they needed. In the same way, God invites us to trust His plan to save us.

I am concerned that a growing number are missing out on God’s blessing, and His plan to teach us that He can be trusted. Despite God’s clear counsel on the subject, a number within the church are either not returning God’s tithe, or diverting it to ministries or projects of their own choosing. They reason that they are responding to a greater need, they disagree with church management, or they feel they have a better plan for how the tithe should be used.

Do other ministries need money? Are there areas where we could improve our management? Obviously the answer is “Yes.” But does that justify abandoning God’s perfect plan to take care of His work? Should we choose to rely on our own plans and resources instead of His? The answer is found over and over again in the stories of Scripture.

When God told Abraham and Sarah they were going to have a child and that their family would outnumber the stars in the heavens, and the sands of the seas, they laughed! Had God not noticed their age? With all sincerity, Abraham and Sarah came up with their own plan to fulfill the promise of God. They reasoned that by including Hagar, they could bring about the fulfillment of God’s promise. We all know how that story turned out.

In order for God’s plan to be implemented, Ishmael had to be sent away because of the threat he was to Isaac. In the same way, we must abort our own schemes and methods to fund our mission and rely on God’s simple plan of trusting Him, living by faith in what He will provide.

Is it possible that you have fallen into the trap of trying to fulfill a project or ministry outside of God’s plan? Not following God’s plan is the surest way to ruin a project, cripple a ministry, or even miss out on the personal blessings God has in store for you or your family.

By faithfully returning God’s tithe, especially when our human wisdom or perspective counters the notion, we give God an opportunity to open the windows of Heaven. As we experience God’s faithfulness in providing for our financial needs, our hearts learn to trust Him at an even deeper level as “the God of our Salvation” (see Ps. 24:6).

BCA Celebrates Successful Reading Program

Michigan—As the school year began at Battle Creek Academy (BCA), the summer reading program, “Read Through the Summer,” ended.

The program, coordinated by Charlene Lavallee, BCA 3rd- and 4th-grade teacher, was open to students in kindergarten through the 8th grade. The goal was for students to read ten out of the twelve weeks of summer. Age-appropriate guidelines describing reading time and frequency requirements were prepared for each grade level.

Participating students charted their progress each day. Thirteen BCA students successfully completed the program. Each received a Certificate of Completion and a new book at an awards ceremony where Kevin Kossick, BCA principal, spoke to the students and their families about endurance and completing the task at hand.

The Teen Leadership Training (TLT) program addresses adolescent developmental needs and promotes leadership skills, enabling and empowering teens to become full partners in the mission of the Adventist Church with adult leadership, in a shared service experience of Pathfinder ministry.

Fifty-four TLTs train for six months in the six following areas: administrative, finance/clerical, camping/activities, outreach, counseling, and AY classwork/honors. This training is accomplished alongside adult staff members and in addition to regular AY class work.

Those participating in the FOF investiture service included: 18 entering the program for the first time, who received a special red and black braid; 20 who received the first level pin; 13 who received the second level pin; 10 who received the third level pin; and one who received the fourth level pin. The Pathfinder TLT is ready to be invested as a Master Guide upon completing the fourth level.

Once the training sequence is completed, TLTs begin to serve as a club staff member. Several TLTs have become Pathfinder leaders because of the training they received in this program. Others have had the opportunity to help write new AY honors for the North American Division.

The TLT pledge says:

“Loving the Lord Jesus, I promise to take an active part in the work of the Teen Leadership Training program, doing what I can to help others and to finish the work of the Gospel in all the world.”

It is an honor for a Pathfinder to become a TLT, and it is an honor to have young people willing to go the extra mile to become a TLT for the Lord.

One Thousand Baptismal Robes and Still Counting

Michigan—On Sept. 10, 2004, June Nafziger, a member of the Coloma (Mich.) Church, completed sewing her 1,000th baptismal robe. Since 1972, June has used 3,000 yards of royal blue material and sent robes to fifty-two churches in Michigan, plus twenty states across the United States and ten foreign countries. You’ll find June’s robes in countries like Austria, Mongolia, and Cambodia just to name a few. One robe went to a pastor in Africa, and he reports wearing it to baptize over 10,000 people.

Several years ago June heard of the need for baptismal robes for churches in Russia. She made a covenant with the Lord, “You supply the funds, and I’ll make the robes.” June was soon able to send 94 robes, which undoubtedly have been used to baptize hundreds. She often receives pictures and videos of the baptisms.

Robert, June’s husband, encourages her to continue making robes. He faithfully maintains the sewing machines to ensure that she’ll be sewing as long as she enjoys it. June owns two sewing machines, a New Home and a Singer, and she “sings” praises to God as she contemplates our “new homes” in Heaven.

June says she will keep the 1,000th robe in the family. In her spare time, June enjoys making lap robes for nursing home patients.

The Passion of Love Impacts Indiana Communities

Indiana—Rich Uphus, personal ministries leader for the Cicero (Ind.) Church, and other members living in Arcadia, Ind., wanted The Passion of Love to be read by everyone in their town. They pooled resources and distributed the book, a letter, and a Sow 1 Billion card to community residents. The letter was personalized with the names and addresses of church members residing in Arcadia.

After the books were mailed, the response from neighbors was so favorable the church expanded this outreach endeavor to include the surrounding towns of Atlanta, Cicero, Sheridan and Tipton.

On Sabbath, May 8, Cicero members held a special season of prayer for The Passion of Love books that would soon blanket these communities near their church. Over 120 enthusiastic members gathered at the elementary school gymnasium to prepare packets for their neighbors. In just over an hour, over 11,000 packets were assembled for distribution.

It didn’t take long for word to trickle back that their neighbors appreciated the kindness of Cicero members. One woman read the book and then returned to the post office to see if she could obtain three additional copies for her adult children. Another woman visited the Adventist Book Center (ABC) in Cicero to see if she could purchase more books. Lloyd Jacobs, ABC manager, had exactly the number of copies she requested and gladly shared them with her. Another neighbor searched the Internet to find the phone number of a member who was listed on the letter, and then called to say “Thank you.”

Cicero members are praying for their neighbors who have received the books and claim the promise found in Isaiah 55:11: “So shall My word be that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”

The Passion of Love is a sharing book available through Remnant Publications in Coldwater, Mich.

Hope Channel—Adventist Television’s Newest Network

In January 2004, Adventist Television Network launched Hope Channel, which broadcasts a variety of programming 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Hope Channel uses six satellites to cover the world, offering the world church a wide availability of air-time to represent Adventism in culturally relevant ways.

Hope Channel currently offers English and Spanish channels for North America, and Spanish and Portuguese channels for South America, Inter-America, and Portugal. Future plans include adding Hope Channel Africa in Portuguese and French, and eventually Hope Channel Asia.

Evangelism is the number one mandate. NET evangelistic events and other outreach Bible study... programs are broadcast. Spiritual nurture programs are also given strong emphasis. Programming includes events, such as the Pathfinder Camporee and the upcoming 2005 General Conference Session.

The General Conference provides a base subsidy to cover administrative and office expenses as well as some satellite costs. Beyond this, the Hope Channel ministry is completely dependent on donations.

Individuals interested in getting Hope Channel may contact www.AdventistSAT.com, which will provide the necessary satellite equipment. They offer a quality system, and can also arrange professional installation at a reasonable fee. To order, call toll-free: (866) 255-2651. The system costs US$204, but there are no monthly subscription fees. The receivers come pre-programmed to receive five Adventist television networks and three Adventist radio channels. If people already receive 3ABN on a 36-inch dish, they can call to learn how to tune their existing equipment to receive Hope Channel programming.

AMAZING FACTS

“A DEEP BUT DAZZLING DARKNESS”

“An astonishingly brave exposition…”

Christians have struggled to harmonize a God who chooses to suffer and die for souls, while also being willing to condemn them to hell. Is He heartlessly merciful, or is He uncompassionately just—can these attributes be reconciled?

Authors Leslie Kay and Jennifer Jill Schweitzer courageously explore God’s “dark side” by the light that streams from the cross, to resolve a common stumbling block that makes trusting God difficult for millions. A masterpiece that will change lives and lead others to Christ!

Jackie was a patient in Hinsdale Hospital’s muscular dystrophy clinic before becoming a wheelchair-mobile, enthusiastic volunteer. But the death of a cousin troubled her and she asked physical therapist, Sybil, about her spiritual beliefs.

Sybil says she appreciates working in an environment that supports spiritual as well as physical therapy. "I’m not afraid to share my faith, and if it impacts someone in a positive way, then I appreciate that. It’s helpful for them physically and spiritually."

Sybil continued to encourage Jackie, who now works at Chicago’s Hinsdale Hospital and expresses an interest in following a spiritual path—possibly becoming a pastor.

"In the last few months there’s been such an enormous change," says Sybil. "There’s so much joy. Even though I’m sure she was a happy person all along, the joy is just spilling over and it’s quite contagious."

The love and compassion of Christ’s healing ministry continues through the work of Adventist Health System. With a mission like this, there’s a place for someone like you.

Sitting in the back corner of the classroom, I was wading somewhere between boredom and content. The hood of my sweatshirt was pulled over my head. At that moment, I didn’t care what the teacher was saying but half-listened anyway.

After some careful re-examination of my life I had decided to give college a second chance, despite the fact that my attitude and my actions failed to show it at the present time. Nevertheless, at this point in the semester I was content with just getting by, passing through classes undetected and somewhat unnoticed. If I could go through the entire semester with a minimal amount of effort, I would be in “heaven.”

Then came something I didn’t expect. The teacher looked into my corner of the room, past my uninterested disposition, called me by name and simply asked “What do you think?” For a moment I was taken aback. Did she not receive the memo? Had she not been informed that I was taking it easy and should not be asked for questions and comments? Apparently not. So, after the initial shock of being called upon wore off, I proceeded to give my opinion on the discussion.

As I look forward to my graduation, I will forever remember that as one of the defining moments in my college experience. To this teacher, I was more than just an enrollment number or an owner of her syllabus. She was willing to look past what everyone else saw and give me something that I appeared to not want—an opportunity to learn.

The Greatest Teacher of all works much the same way. Despite how we look to the rest of the world, or the façade that we put up for everyone to see, Christ looks past all things with the desire to give us what we need. He looks for us no matter where we hide: corners of classrooms, with our friends, behind the television, on the Internet. He wants to give us the opportunity to be with Him and be more like Him. Even if we don’t want His love, He offers it anyway. He calls upon us and asks us to learn from Him, with the promise to remove our hoods or disguises, and covers us with His blood.

Teachers in classrooms have the ability to look at the potential of the mind. Jesus has the ability to look at the potential of the heart.

I am grateful to still be learning from both.

Pierre Quinn

Pierre Quinn is a 23-year-old college senior. He is majoring in communication at Andrews University and is a member of the Pontiac Southside Church.
Profiles of Youth

Tyler Day, a 2004 Battle Creek Academy graduate, is an inspiration to everyone who knows him. He perseveres through trials and pushes himself beyond what would normally be expected of a young person. Tyler is battling terminal cancer that has forced him into a wheelchair and required four surgeries over his high-school years. When most students were juggling school, homework, friends, jobs, and activities, Tyler was coping with daily physical therapy, countless doctor appointments, and a barrage of medicines and treatments. Tyler still came to school even when he was in incredible pain, and used every spare minute to do homework as he pushed toward graduation.

Through all of this, Tyler has gained an incredible faith and uplifts God in a way that touches the hearts of his family, friends, and countless others who have come to know him because of this disease. Tyler’s brother, Seth, shared that “they [Tyler’s family] have been able to see God’s purpose for Tyler’s life as letters came in from people from all over whose lives have been changed as they witnessed Tyler’s hard work, persevering spirit, and love for God.”

Tori Steely, also a 2004 Battle Creek Academy graduate, always pushed herself to know more. A motivated National Honor Society student, she took both Advanced Math and Calculus in the same year to better prepare herself for college, and excelled in both.

Tori was one of 30 teenagers chosen from the Battle Creek area to be a member of the Youth Alliance Committee, an organization that works “to empower and improve the lives of young people through philanthropy or learning and demonstrating the desire to help humankind.”

Tori’s love for her fellow students also made her the perfect choice for Student Association president; Tori made many contributions toward school spirit through this position.

Tori was involved in many different spiritual activities, including campus ministries and youth vespers at Battle Creek Tabernacle where she attends. Her love for God shows through in all areas of her life. Tori believes “the most important thing I learned is how to use my talents for God.” She credits her teachers with encouraging her to use her God-given talents, showing her how to use them in the best possible way, and allowing her to learn and grow from mistakes.

Tori is attending Andrews University, where she is studying Biology / Pre-medicine, and plans to be a pediatrician.
