The lives of 50 Congolese refugees will be improved and forever changed thanks to the response of the Ebenezer Adventist church in Philadelphia, Pa. The Nationalities Service Center assisting the U.S. government in resettling refugees, contacted Ebenezer to tell them that the Congolese had requested to be connected to an Adventist church. Ebenezer’s response has been so generous they had to be encouraged to stop. MORE

Read op-ed about the religious liberty case heard by the U.S. Supreme Court today, regarding the young Muslim woman who Abercrombie & Fitch would not hire due to her headscarf which she wore because of her religious beliefs. It was written by Dwayne Leslie, Director of Legislative Affairs for the General Conference, and just published in Huffington Post. The case is expected to be decided by sometime in the Spring, 2015. It is believed that a ruling against the young woman would have implications for other people with religious freedom issues in the U.S. Read the editorial.

Scholarship opportunities are available to African American and low income graduate nursing students at Washington Adventist University (WAU) located in Takoma Park, Md. New evening classes start the week of March 8, and there’s still time to apply. Apply. For more about WAU’s School of Graduate and Professional Studies, click here. MORE

Video - The art of aging: CNN's Dr. Sanjay Gupta explores ways to slow the aging process and live a longer life.
Adventist Health System gives Union College $2 million
Camp Hope says damage from ice storm close to $300,000

February 25, 2015

Special Days

February Focus: Family Life
Feb. 7–28, Black History Month
Feb. 22–28, Family Togetherness Week
Feb. 28, Family Togetherness Sabbath

March Focus: Women in the Church
Mar. 1–7, Adventist Youth Week of Prayer
Mar. 7, Women’s Day of Prayer
Mar. 21, Disabilities Awareness Sabbath

Offerings
Mar. 14, Adventist World Radio

Sample Offertory Readings
(in English, Spanish, Portuguese and French)

Upcoming Events:
Feb. 27–Mar. 1, Adventist Recovery Ministries Training, Glendale, CA
Mar. 2–6, NAD Health Ministries Training, Guam, Micronesia
Mar. 11–12, 2nd Youth and
Takoma Park university plans to expand health professions building

Families get shelter from cold in ‘divine’ place in Takoma Park

School offering free health screening

Non-food need? Not a problem: Bath church launches pantry ...

Ogden Road Seventh-day Adventist members travel to Vera Cruz...

---

Announcements

All-night Prayer Call with NAD Prayer Ministries will be from 10 p.m. ET Thursday, Mar. 5, to 5 a.m. ET Friday, Mar. 6. Join anytime throughout the night, even if for only a few minutes. Call 404-891-6338. Code is 772937# (Prayer). Download a bulletin insert (four per page) to share with church members and friends. MORE

The Nonprofit Leadership Program (NLCP), March 23-27, is designed to equip pastors, church administration and lay-leadership with strategies and professional skills to successfully lead. It teaches leadership, management, and social dimensions of evangelism. MORE Register here.

The SONscreen Film Festival, April 2-4 at La Sierra University, is accepting submissions. Submission deadline: March 6. A new pricing structure is available this year. Students who are not submitting a film may attend the entire festival for $25. This includes meals, breakouts, and film blocks. Also, individuals interested in just watching films can attend film blocks for $5 per person per block.

Old Fashioned writer/director/lead actor Rik Schwartzwelder and producer Nathan Nazario will be participating, as well as Jason Satterlund, director of The Record Keeper. MORE Register here. Like SONscreen on Facebook.

Impact2015 is a division and GC young adult leadership and discipleship experience that will run in conjunction with the 2015 GC Session in San Antonio, Texas. It will include activities in ministries such as homeless, juvenile centers, prisons/jails, encouragement, street art, community prayer, yard and home makeovers, community garden, children's day camp, health, family finance, and an outdoor youth rally/concert. Early bird registration deadline:
GC Session travel insurance is available through Adventist Risk Management for non-delegates. Coverage includes medical emergencies, loss of personal property or trip cancellation. ARM will have a small claims office onsite in San Antonio to expedite claims. Sign up here.

Denominational business cards are available through AdventID where they have been printing business cards and stationary for Adventist employees, from the local church to the world headquarters, for 15 years. You can create, preview, and order your personalized design online where there are more than 20 templates and four languages to choose from. Stationary and envelopes are also available. The Pacific Press Publishing Association will not be printing business cards or stationary. Go to www.AdventID.com.

NAD Prayer Ministries has added a new channel on YouTube so that all videos from the 2014 Prayer Conference in Monterey, Calif., can be viewed. Check out Go to the Rock.

“Circumstances Alter Cases – The social and political implications of women in ministry,” presented by Dr. Jon Paulien, Dean of the School of Religion at Loma Linda University

Dr. Paulien invites listeners to check the texts he quotes to be sure of what he is saying about them. Do they teach different principles on the same issue? If there are two sides of an issue, is one evil and devious while the other pure and straightforward? What are some examples of when cases were altered for different circumstances in the Bible? Watch the video.

Links associated with Jon Paulien: The Battle of Armageddon Blog; Facebook; Logos; Lifeworks of Jon Paulien
Simplicity Ministry in Allentown, Pa., is reaching their community in tangible, practical ways and making a memorable impact on lives there. They clean up and improve landscaping, offer ESL classes, help people find jobs and plan career paths. They share the love of Jesus with everyone around them. Watch the video.
Ebenezer Church Hosts 50 Congolese Refugees

Michelle Bernard

After receiving a call for help from the Nationalities Service Center (NSC), an agency that assists the United States government in resettling refugees, the Ebenezer church in Philadelphia responded by welcoming 50 Congolese refugees. The refugees had requested they be connected to a Seventh-day Adventist church before they left. The NSC located and contacted the closest Adventist church to their new home in Philadelphia—Ebenezer.

Ebenezer is responsible for providing for the spiritual needs of the Congolese. To accomplish this goal, the church purchased translation equipment, transmitters and earphones to translate the services to Kiswahili, which many of the refugees can understand, even though it is not their native tongue. Members also secured the services of a man who speaks Kinyarwanda, the native tongue of the Congolese, and obtained Sabbath School lessons in Kinyarwanda. The church also plans to start English as a Second Language classes for the refugees.

Even with the language challenges, the families are becoming actively involved in various church activities. The Congolese children participate in various Children’s Ministries activities and sing with the children’s choir.

Crystal Drake, wife of Pastor Charles Drake, is spearheading the efforts, along with the support of her husband and church members. “The church has rallied around these families. They have given so much in clothing and household goods until we had to ask them to stop,” she says. The church also provides school uniforms and holds job-training seminars for the group.
Abercrombie & Fitch, The Supreme Court and You

Dwayne Leslie

I've heard it said that the key to successful communication -- to persuasion -- is answering a central question for the audience: "What's in it for me?"

This makes sense. As adults, most of us are pretty set in our ways, with a fairly well-defined outlook on the world. To persuade you to care enough to support my position, it stands to reason that I should be able to describe for you why you would benefit by agreeing with me.

Still, even knowing what I'm supposed to do, I'm afraid I must say that for the vast majority of you, there is no obvious reason for you to actively support my position today.

Truth is, as director of legislative affairs for the worldwide Seventh-day Adventist Church, the issue I'm about to share with you actually doesn't even directly impact me, other Adventist church members, or even other fellow Christians.

No. The issue in question concerns a young woman who believes differently than I do. And yet, I care deeply about this case that is being heard by the Supreme Court involving a young Muslim woman who was denied employment by Abercrombie & Fitch due to the headscarf she wore for religious reasons... because this conflicted with Abercrombie & Fitch's "look policy."

So troubling are the religious freedom issues in this case that the Seventh-day Adventist Church filed an amicus (or "friend of the court") brief in support of the young woman's position as the case wound its way through the court system. A range of diverse organizations -- including the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), Christian Legal Society, National Association of Evangelicals, Church of God in Christ, American Islamic Congress, the Sikh Coalition and others -- joined our brief, underscoring the critically important issues in this case.

Our collective opposition to Abercrombie & Fitch's position is grounded in a piece of legislation of which you may never have heard: Title VII (of the Civil Rights Act). When originally passed by Congress in 1964, this bill was viewed as an important safeguard against government-imposed religious restrictions.

While rightly recognized as landmark legislation, it wasn't long before folks understood that the law didn't go far enough -- it did not prevent workplace-related religious discrimination. This was addressed in 1972 when Congress expanded the legislation by adding a religious-accommodation requirement... a key provision that acknowledged that religious freedom in one's workplace was as (if not more) important to most believers as the issue of government-imposed restrictions originally addressed by Title VII.

Which brings us back to the case at hand, a situation that dates back six years.

In 2008, a young Muslim woman by the name of Samantha Elauf, interviewed with an Abercrombie & Fitch store in Tulsa, OK. She wore a hijab, or headscarf, during the interview.

The store manager never asked Ms. Elauf if she wore the headscarf for religious reasons (but later said she "assumed" Ms. Elauf was Muslim) and, ultimately, asked superiors about Abercrombie & Fitch's headwear policy. The manager was informed that headwear was not allowed and that -- despite the fact that the applicant had scored high enough on "overall" and "look" criteria during her interview to be hired -- the manager should lower the score so that Ms. Elauf would be ineligible to be hired.

On Ms. Elauf's behalf, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) sued Abercrombie & Fitch for violating the previously mentioned Title VII. The EEOC and Ms. Elauf prevailed and was awarded $20,000 in damages at the trial court level but the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit overturned the decision and damages award.

The key question in the case is whether it is an applicant's obligation to ask for a religious "accommodation," or whether it is incumbent on the prospective employer to proactively raise the issue, based on the employer's belief that such an accommodation might be needed. As underscored in our amicus brief, we strongly believe the obligation lies with the employer, because how could an applicant even raise the issue, having no idea about an employer's dress code?

And so now it's on to the Supreme Court for a final ruling. Frankly, it's a pretty big deal that the Supreme Court agreed to hear this case, as this is the first religious accommodation case to be heard by that Court in nearly three decades.

So why do I personally care so deeply about this case, not being Muslim? First, I care because I believe Ms. Elauf was denied the right to practice her religion and follow her conscience, rights to which all of us are entitled in America. And I also care because this case is about even more than one individual's rights... as important as that is. A ruling against Ms. Elauf will have implications for people who choose not to work on their Sabbath or holy day for religious reasons. It further would affect the ability of believers of many faiths to adhere to religiously motivated appearance standards.

On Wednesday, February 25, the Supreme Court will hear this case and in a few months render one seemingly small decision. But for people of faith -- and anyone who cares about religious freedom- - it will be an incredibly large decision =... one that will set precedent and have ripples that will be felt for many years to come.

So what's in it for you, non-Muslim reader? Maybe nothing at all. But, like me, if you believe the potential implications of this case run far deeper than assessing whether one individual's rights were violated... then perhaps there is a great deal in it for you where this case is concerned.

The Seventh-day Adventist church and those diverse organizations who joined our amicus brief hope and pray that the Supreme Court strikes down the Tenth Circuit Court's unreasonable ruling that the burden is on a job applicant to ask for a religious exemption for rules he or she doesn't even know exist... and make clear that this obligation lies with the employer, where it belongs.

In our view, there is much at stake here. For all of us.
Takoma Park, MD (February 20, 2015) African American and low-income students who are interested in earning a master’s degree in nursing at Washington Adventist University are eligible for scholarship funding to help pay for their education. The University is a recipient of U.S. Department of Education grant funding, which includes student scholarship funds to help African American and low-income (non-African American) students gain access to nursing education.

“These scholarships can be life-changing for the individuals who are eligible,” said Karen Benn Marshall, Ed.D., who is Dean of the School of Health Professions, Science and Wellness. “I encourage those who are interested in a graduate nursing degree to apply and take advantage of this support.”

Students eligible for the scholarship funding must: (1) be a citizen or permanent resident of the United States; (2) be African American or provide income documentation that they are low income (non-African American); (3) apply and gain acceptance to the graduate nursing program at Washington Adventist University; (4) complete a student application form for the funding online at https://www.wau.edu/images/Nursing_Dpt/Student%20Application%20for%20Grant%20for%20graduate%20nursing%20program.pdf; and (5) submit a 500-word, typed essay (see details on the application form) that covers the applicant’s reasons for seeking funding, along with examples of their contributions to the African American or low-income community.

Once their application is submitted, students will be notified of the amount that will be awarded to them. In order to maintain their funding eligibility, they must maintain all other nursing program requirements.
New evening classes start the week of March 8, and there’s still time to apply. For more information or to apply online, go to https://www.wau.edu/academics/school-of-graduate-and-professional-studies or call 301-891-4092 on weekdays: Monday through Thursday, 8:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.; and Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 12 noon. The University’s School of Graduate and Professional Studies offers accelerated degree programs with flexible schedules to meet the needs of working adults.

Washington Adventist University has been educating students on its 19-acre campus in Takoma Park for 110 years. The campus is located adjacent to Washington Adventist Hospital and is Metro-accessible -- located 1.5 miles from the Takoma Station, with a bus stop and Bikeshare station on campus. Students can also park for free in lots located in front of and behind the academic buildings, located along Flower Avenue near the intersection with Carroll Avenue.

# #

Washington Adventist University is Montgomery County’s only four-year private college. Part of the Seventh-day Adventist system of higher education, Washington Adventist University has been educating college students since 1904 on a 19-acre campus in suburban Takoma Park, close to the nation’s capital. A total of 1,080 students of all faiths participate in the university’s eight graduate and 32 undergraduate programs. The 2014 edition of U.S. News & World Report ranked Washington Adventist University among the best regional colleges in the north.

Media Contacts:
Angie Crews, 301-891-4134, acrews@wau.edu
Donna Bigler, 240-286-1169, dbigler@wau.edu
A Seventh-day Adventist hospital system donated $2 million to Union College earlier this month, the college said Tuesday.

Adventist Health System, a Florida-based health care provider that runs 45 hospitals in 10 states including Kansas and Colorado, presented the gift to the Union College Board of Trustees on Feb. 9.

The gift is the largest academic endowment in school history and will be used to establish the first endowed academic chairmanship in the Division of Business and Computer Science, said college spokesman Ryan Teller.

A previous endowment established a professorship, Teller said. The gift increases Union College’s $14.65 million endowment by 14 percent.

“Thanks to support from organizations like Adventist Health System and our faithful alumni, Union College will be able to strengthen and expand the business curriculum and further equip graduates to be effective business leaders,” Union College President Vinita Sauder said in a news release.

Don Jernigan, president of Adventist Health System, said the system appreciates Union College’s dedication to training future leaders through a Christian-faith based education.

“It is my prayer that this gift will strengthen Union and thus also help to strengthen our company through the future infusion of skilled, spiritual health care leaders,” Jernigan said.

Barry Forbes, chairman of Union College’s business division, said the relationship between the college and Adventist Health Systems is mutually beneficial.

“We appreciate all the opportunities our students have with AHS -- both with internships that give our students valuable practical experience -- and ultimately hiring a number of them upon graduation," Forbes said. “In fact, many have become hospital CEOs and senior executives at AHS hospitals.”

Reach the writer at 402-473-7120 or cdunker@journalstar.com. On Twitter @ChrisDunkerLJS.
Camp Hope says damage from ice storm close to $300,000

By Justin McElroy

The damage was even more than they first thought.

Fifty-two damaged roofs. Three hundred thousand dollars in total damage. Up to three months of cleanup.

But Camp Hope, a conference, camping and wedding centre operated by the Seventh-day Adventist Church, is turning the corner after an ice storm in January caused mass havoc. Hundreds of trees were split, electrical wiring was destroyed, thousands of dollars of food went bad and the chapel's stained glass windows were broken.

READ MORE: Camp Hope picks up the pieces after massive damage from ice storm

“There was virtually no part of the camp that wasn’t untouched,” says Bill Gerber. “It’s almost been overwhelming, but with the help of our volunteers it’s been doable.”

This weekend has seen 35 volunteers at the camp, repairing buildings and sweeping away the thousands of limbs and branches that fell on the ground. For the last month, people who have been at Camp Hope at one time or another been coming from as far away as Courtenay and Barriere, helping to restore it to its previous condition.

“If I can help someone it’s worth it, for myself it doesn’t matter,” says Norman Duncan, a certified tree faller from Kelowna. “They had a problem, I was happy to help.”

PHOTOS: Damage at the Camp Hope Camp and Conference Centre in January
Duncan spent much of the day cutting down damaged trees and making sure they wouldn't cause more damage.

“It’s very dangerous, there's four or five tops on some of these trees, and you don’t know where they're going to go.”

Gerber says the camp won't be fully repaired until late next month, but says it would be much worse without the volunteers.
“If it wasn’t for our volunteers, [with] my staff of three maintenance guys, I don’t think we wouldn’t have gotten this done before the fall.”

“If it wasn’t for the volunteers, I don’t know, it’s hard to say. But they have really come through for us and still are.”

- With files from Jeremy Hunka

© Shaw Media, 2015

Report an error
Washington Adventist University plans to expand and renovate its health professions building on the Takoma Park campus. This is a rendering of how the new 50,000-square-foot center would look.

While Washington Adventist Hospital makes plans to reduce its presence in Takoma Park, Washington Adventist University, near the medical center, is heading in the opposite direction.

The four-year private college, part of the Seventh-day Adventist Church’s higher education system, hopes to start construction in the late spring of 2016 on a 50,000-square-foot center for health professions, science and wellness programs.

The project, expected to cost about $10 million, will involve renovating and expanding the existing health professions building. Besides the university’s health professions and science classes, there also will be community programs in nutritional cooking, exercise and other wellness activities.

“The center will offer exciting and endless possibilities for this university, as we find new ways to enhance the education of our students in the health and science professions, promote healthy living and improve community wellness,” WAU President Weymouth Spence said in a statement.

About $2.4 million in state grants have been secured for the center, and a little more than $1 million in private donations have been raised, said Angie Crews, a university spokeswoman.

The bulk of the donations came from Frederick health care executive and Board of Trustees member Bruce E. Boyer, who presented a $1 million check for the project at a recent board meeting.

Boyer spent time on campus as a child in the 1950s, when his parents attended the university, known as Washington Missionary College. In the 1960s, he was a psychology major at the school, then called Columbia Union College. He joined the board in the 1970s.

In 2009, the college attained university status and changed its name to the present version.

The 19-acre university’s roots date to the establishment in 1904 of the coeducational Washington Training College.
It now has about 1,100 students in 32 undergraduate and eight graduate programs.

Adventist HealthCare, the parent of Washington Adventist Hospital, has applied with the state to build a modern campus on land it owns in White Oak. Officials hope the new facility would open by early 2019, if state approval is granted by this summer.

The Takoma Park campus is 13 acres, much smaller than the proposed 49-acre White Oak campus. Takoma Park would retain a behavioral unit, an urgent care center, a rehabilitation center, a clinic for low-income women and a center operated by partner Community Clinic. There also would be outpatient services and physician offices, and the hospital would lease about 55,000 square feet to Washington Adventist University.

kshay@gazette.net
By Mike Murillo | @MikeMurilloWTOP February 21, 2015 8:01 am

TAKOMA PARK, MD. — It's six degrees on a Friday night, and the lights are on in the basement of the Sligo Seventh-Day Adventist Church. Inside, children play and adults talk and laugh.

Just hours ago, many of these families without a home didn't know they would be here, in the warmth, with cots to sleep on, and hot meals to eat.

But now they are in a shelter set up by Donna Robinson and her the non-profit House of Divine Guidance.

"We have people that are sleeping in cars, sleeping on benches, just because they've been evicted or they have lost their jobs," Robinson said.
The church donates the space and Robinson provides the staff, made up of mostly volunteers. She says they started this year with a commitment to help 10 people, but quickly the number grew to 30 men, women and children because the need was so great.

In addition to a place to stay, people who come to the shelter are entertained with movies and games. Also, adults are provided with services that Robinson hopes will help them get back on their feet.

Robinson says the the reward is the smiles, and love she receives from those she helps, especially the many young children at the shelter. “If you interacted with them you would never know the backgrounds of their lives,” she said.

Melanie Aragon, 31, of Germantown Md., says this shelter is a blessing. “The weather out there is bitter cold, and I can’t imagine being out there in this weather. This is a blessing to be here with everyone,” she said.

Sarah Dwyer, 26, is homeless, and says she is grateful for organizations like this. “It makes me not feel alone, and it brings me comfort to know that there’s somebody out there that cares and is really looking out for my well being even though they might not know me,” Dwyer said.

Robinson says the organization is raising money to one day purchase a home where she can house more families year round, not just when the temperatures dip. The organization also accepts donations of warm weather clothing, which they give to the people that stay at the shelter.

Follow @WTOP on Twitter and WTOP on Facebook.

© 2015 WTOP. All Rights Reserved.
Guam - The Guam Adventist Academy Medical Club is sponsoring a free health screening at the Agana Shopping Center this Sunday, February 22 from 10am to 1pm. According to club advisor Carmen Kasperbauer, the health screening will not only provide blood pressure screening, blood sugar testing and body mass index checks but doctors from the Seventh-Day Adventist Clinic will also provide medical consultations.

The event is free and open to the public.
Non-food need? Not a problem: Bath church launches pantry for personal items

Alex Lear

BATH — The city and surrounding communities, which already benefit from the Bath Food Pantry, now also have the Little Flock Non-Food Bank to help those with needs for personal-care products.

The food pantry, meanwhile, which was seeking a new home, will instead be able to stay put. It is not affiliated with the non-food bank.

The non-food bank, which opened three months ago at the Seventh-Day Adventist Church, 889 High St., offers items like toothpaste, toothbrushes, shampoo, deodorant, shaving materials, dish and laundry soap, and paper products, as well as hats and mittens during the colder months.

Roxanne Profenno, the church clerk, said last week she came up with the idea of the bank at a board meeting, when the pastor asked those gathered to think about things they could do to help the community.

"The Lord just inspired me with this thought of a non-food bank, because there are a lot of churches and places doing food banks, which are wonderful, but ... folks need these other things that are just as important," Profenno said. "... So I just started thinking, what if we helped them out with those types of things."

She added that "it's an effort being put forth by the entire church, not just me. ... We're all working together."

The "Little Flock" name is a nod to the church's small group, Profenno said.

The bank is open every second and fourth Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; clients are allowed one visit a month, and must provide proof of residency in Bath, Arrowsic, Georgetown, Phippsburg, West Bath or Woolwich.

The bank is funded by 10 percent of the church budget.

"Anyone in need in this area, we would welcome them to come, but we also are looking for donations," Profenno said. "We desperately need donations."

Donated items can be dropped off at the bank when it is open. Monetary donations can be sent to Little Flock Non-Food Bank, P.O. Box 543, Bath, ME 04530. Those wanting to donate, or who have questions about doing so, can reach Profenno at 865-3401 or 632-0905, or the church at 443-9333.

Profenno credited Kimberly Gates, executive director of the Bath Area Food Bank – of which the food pantry is a part – for helping the non-food bank get off the ground.

"She's been very supportive," Profenno said.

Food pantry stays put

Gates has had some kind support at her end, too.

The recent sale of the Neighborhood United Church of Christ at 150 Congress Ave. meant that the food pantry, based there for more than 14 years, would have to move.
But the New Meadows Childcare & Learning Center, one of the building's tenants for eight years, purchased the property last month, and it is allowing the pantry to remain.

"I know so many of my present clients were really worried about the possibility of us having to close," Gates wrote Feb. 11 in an email, adding that "thanks to the Day Care ... that did not happen! We didn't miss even one shift!!"

Trisha Charbonneau, one of the owners of the building and business, said Feb. 13 that the property is serving as a community building for tenants, "because the need is really there, and it's a large building. It's a beautiful facility. ... I think that it serves a better need for the community, having (the food pantry) stay here."

The pantry is moving to the back of the building, which provides a more private space, Charbonneau said.

The Neighborhood UCC has been operating at a temporary site, the Minnie Brown Center at 906 Washington St., and is planning to move downtown, according to its website, faithinbath.org.

Alex Lear can be reached at 781-3661 ext. 113 or alear@theforecaster.net. Follow him on Twitter: @learics.
Thank you so much for supporting us on our mission trip to Mexico. We crossed the border on the beginning of the third day and drove till three o'clock in the morning. Our base was by Vera Cruz. We worked hard in that early morning to get set up, and some of us didn’t get to bed until 6 a.m. and we were all up again by 8 a.m.

Our goal for this trip was to build three churches. We built four churches, and put a roof on a fifth. We also held Vacation Bible School (VBS), evening meetings and health expos. We started those projects on Friday of our first week. A couple people came to the meetings, but we had hoped for more.

That Sabbath we were sent door-to-door. We divided into several groups before heading out. Each group took Spanish Bibles and other religious materials to pass out as we went.

The number of people at our meetings, and at VBS, drastically increased.

We dedicated two of the churches on the last Friday (and one on Sabbath morning before church). On Sabbath we had 10 baptisms, and when we left there were many others waiting for Bible studies!

Even though it wasn't easy, we gained valuable experience that will last forever.
Prayer Call
Thursday, March 5
Starting at 10 pm ET - Ending at 2 am ET
Phone # 404-891-6338
Access Code 772937# (Prayer#)