NEWS ITEM: Adventist Vegetarian Restaurant highlighted in The Washington Post!
I thought this terrific article that features a concept that REACH-NYC has been discussing for several months - the opening of a Vegetarian Plant Based Restaurant right here in New York City. In the West Village to be congratulate our friends in Maine for their creative and innovative thinking.

REACH-NYC has sponsored vegetarian plant based seminars and cooking schools for the past two years at two locations, 12 West 40th Street, and most recently, at a space we use at Historic Manhattan Seventh-day Adventist Church, located at 232 West 11th Street, in the vegetarian friendly area of Greenwich Village.

The idea we are conceptually thinking about is to open a small intimate restaurant in the very same area where we conduct our vegetarian plant based cooking seminars. The venue we use is located in an area of New York City, the West Village, that is home to people who love to eat healthy, and around the corner from a great whole-in-the-wall place that serves Falafel's. We think ours are a lot better, and it might just be a great way to not only serve great food, but to also employ members of our group who could use a good job, while being a friendly face to our neighborhood.

We still need to get the various permits from the City of New York to have such a place to serve what we feel is great vegetarian food, and with the rents upwards of $7,000 a month for a 400 square foot space, why not open one in one of the spaces we currently use?

We congratulate the restaurant up in Maine, that is already showing how a Center of Influence can be operated and be a place where people can get a healthy meal and at the same time, be a place that shares the Good News of the Gospel. Food for the body and the soul.

We will be having another Vegetarian Plant Based Seminar soon, and we hope you can attend.
