Hello Center for,

I remember attending my very first Society of Adventist Communicators convention in Ontario, Calif. At this event, I always find such value in networking with peers, mentoring students, expanding my knowledge of communication and gleaning ideas. In fact, this will be my 10th convention! (Come find me in Lombard and let me know how many SAC conventions you’ve attended!)

I’d like to personally invite you to attend the SAC convention in Lombard, Ill., this October 20-22. You’ll hear from David Neff, Christianity Today editor-in-chief, about the multi-platform challenges facing today’s communicators. In the fields of communication education, broadcast media, print media, public relations, graphic arts, radio or web/social media? There are special interest group sessions just for you! Want to learn something more, as an integrated communicator, about a related communication field? Check out the Friday afternoon line-up of breakout workshops.

Find more information and register today at www.adventistcommunicator.org. Register now for the convention – you can’t beat the price for what we are offering!

Whether you are a communication student or professional, the Society of Adventist Communicators Convention is worth the investment of time and finances to attend. This is a fantastic opportunity for networking, nurturing and continuing education.

I look forward to seeing you in Lombard (Chicago) where we will explore “Integrated Communication: The Hub of Excellence.”
George Johnson Jr.
