Every day, local church congregations entrust individuals with cash, checks, and other assets. While the majority of these individuals are honest, under the right circumstances, even the most loyal individual might steal if given the right motive and opportunity to do so. So what can church congregations do? If most individuals will steal under the right circumstances, then how can theft be prevented? How can theft be detected?

This presentation focuses on how the local church congregation and related stakeholders can address those questions and will present options to help reduce the local church congregation’s risks due to fraud and to increase your ability to detect it.
