"Mission to the Cities" Initiative Creates Zeal for Evangelism in TED

3 July 2013 New York, United States [tedNEWS/ANN] The NY13 initiative is the first in the “Mission to the Cities” (MTTC) campaign, which was unveiled in 2011 by Adventist Church President, Pastor Ted N. C. Wilson. This year’s outreach meetings and training in New York City are the basis for future outreach campaigns worldwide.

The Revelation of Hope Manhattan series with Pastor Wilson, which took place in June 2013, was part of a much larger outreach to Greater New York and neighboring New Jersey and Southern Connecticut. In one of the largest outreaches in Seventh-day Adventist history over 400 evangelistic meetings are being conducted in 2013. It was forecast that by the end of June well over 2000 individuals would have been baptised. Pastors, lay people and church administrators are actively involved in the mission of the church.
The International Field School of Evangelism, for over 550 attendees, was held from 7 – 29 June, at the Luso Brazilian Adventist Church in Corona, New York. The goal was to equip leaders with tools to launch massive evangelistic outreach initiatives in over 650 cities in the world. Twenty-four of the participants were from the Trans-European Division (TED), five from the TED office and 19 from the British Union Conference.

The first big MTTC campaign in the TED will be in London in October this year. The church will host more than 100 evangelism initiatives and Bible schools in London. Members are encouraged to reach out to their circle of influence. In addition to traditional billboard and Underground posters, a clever advertising campaign includes the “Are You Tired” project. Adventist young people will place a “Sabbath couch” on a city sidewalk and offer to let passers-by sit and rest. It’s an opportunity to ask what they would do with a 24-hour break each week, introduce the concept of Sabbath, and invite them to an upcoming meeting nearby. The goal is to have 50,000 people sit on the couch over time leading up to meetings.

“One cannot help but get excited in anticipation of what the Lord will do in London when all the churches pull together in the spirit of cooperation for the ‘Mission to the Cities’ initiative” says Pastor Michael Hamilton, TED Sabbath School and Personal Ministries Director. “Practical lessons have been taught and it is my prayer that much will be implemented in preparation for a bumper harvest in the months and years to come”, concluded Hamilton.
At the forefront of planning for the MTTC in Europe, Pastor Janos Kovacs-Biro, TED Evangelism Director and leader of the MTTC initiative, reports that the Division is also planning meetings next year in other cities, including Belgrade, Serbia; Budapest, Hungary; Dublin, Ireland; Split, Croatia; and Copenhagen, Denmark. “We want to establish community based churches throughout different cities by raising awareness of relevant social issues, manifest the love of Jesus Christ and have a positive impact on people's lives”, says Kovacs-Biro.

Let us pray that our members across the TED will be moved by the Holy Spirit to get involved in some aspect of the MTTC programme.

"Connect to Escape" Comes to New York City

1 July 2013 New York, United States [E. Douglas Venn, tedNEWS] One hundred and fifty people attended the "Connect to Escape" lunch seminar in Manhattan's Midtown area, most of them business people working in the surrounding offices, to enjoy delicious vegetarian food and talk about current situations in the society. The objective of the seminar was to share the wisdom from the Ancient Book (Holy Bible) on how to deal with the challenges in society and our lives. This event was one of 160 evangelistic programs and community service events taking place across Greater New York during June 2013 as part of the NY13 Comprehensive Urban Evangelism (www.nyl3.org).

Dr. Miroslav Pujic, Director of Ministry to Postmoderns at the Trans-European Division, presented a six-part seminar, entitled "Connect to Escape", on June 11 – 13 and 18 – 20, 2013. This seminar was designed to reach those with a postmodern mindset. The program was conducted at lunchtime on weekdays so that those working in the nearby area could attend. The setting for the meetings consisted of a café-style atmosphere with a vegetarian lunch, relaxing background music and a lecture presented in an interactive way inviting audience participation.

Pastor Bledi Leno, a founding pastor of the new church plant at Bryant Park, in Midtown Manhattan, NYC and the host pastor who coordinated this event, stated that this was the first community service being offered to the public. "This event was a great way to make our debut as the "Life Hope Center" in Manhattan's Midtown area (Life-Hope-Center-NYC). Connecting with the locals and seeing them take on interest in the message we were conveying was priceless. For many of them this may have been the only outreach opportunity we had."
Other partners who made this event possible included active local church members and pastors who attended NY13 as delegates. They invited their friends who work in the Central business district to attend the meetings with them. Several pastors from the Southern-Asia Pacific Division invited people off the street and visited and prayed with them. (Read their experiences and get to know the team online at www.h4bc.com). In addition, the local Adventist Book Center provided sample vegetarian foods. As a result of his cooperative effort, the total attendance was 150 for the 6 sessions, with a total of 33 guests.

Participants were presented with the practical benefits of applying Biblical principles into their lives and given tips on how to do this. Dr. Pujic reframed Biblical topics with a relational perspective, addressing relevant issues such as, “Is God doing His job?”, “How to escape corruption?”, “Struggle for survival. Why?”, “Should I forgive someone who hurt me?”, “The Greatest social need” and “End of the world. Really?”

One businessman shared his perspective: “One of the things that touched me the most was the forgiveness segment we had a couple days ago. That was something I needed in my own life. Originally, I'm from Rwanda – a country that has had very tough times. I spoke with Dr. Pujic afterwards – he’s from Serbia and so he knows what it means to live in a country that has gone through war. I was really touched by it and I'm glad I came.”

"Connect to Escape" was held with the purpose of reaching young professionals who work in NYC. There are millions of people that live in the city and many of them commute for over an hour to get to work every day. “Offering an alternate outreach program during lunchtime gave us an opportunity to reach out to people that would be almost impossible to attract to evening meetings,” says Pastor Gerson Santos, Study Center Director for Urban Ministries at the General Conference, Adventist Mission Office and Executive Secretary for the GNYC. “The program proved to be very effective as New Yorkers returned on numerous occasions to attend 'Connect to Escape' during their lunch breaks. Our goal is to continue offering these programs on a monthly basis in order to increase our database of interests, expand our programs to the community, develop contacts for Bible studies and develop small group meetings in the area”, concludes Santos.

The "Life Hope Center" in Manhattan, NYC, is being established to connect with the community and to promote a holistic approach of personal, physical, emotional, social and spiritual development by offering seminars, resources and services. Hundreds Baptized as First NY13 Phase Wraps up at Nassau Coliseum

29 June 2013 Uniondale, New York, United States [Mark A. Kellner, Adventist Review] Wearing a dark blue baptismal robe, Tomas Olivera of Peekskill, New York, stepped into the giant pool placed before the platform at the Nassau Veterans Memorial Coliseum on this afternoon and knew only one thing: he was finally about to be baptized.

It quickly developed that the Seventh-day Adventist pastor who placed Olivera under the water was the president of the Adventist world church, Pastor Ted N. C. Wilson, who had just completed a sermon about the role this religious movement would play at the end of time.

Olivera was all smiles, as was John MacKneil, a former resident of New York’s Greenwich Village, who returned to the Historic Seventh-day Adventist Church on West 11th Street to hear Wilson present a four-week “Revelation of Hope” seminar. MacKneil was also baptized by Wilson, and was a bit overcome at the experience.

“It’s an inspiration to be baptized by this man of God,” MacKneil said, standing next to Wilson, who briefly interned at that church when he first began his ministry. “I wanted to be baptized; I needed to be baptized. I feel good and I feel inspired.” Both MacKneil and Wilson said MacKneil’s brother would also soon join the church.

Inspiration was certainly the theme for this day of celebration and commitment, which was held under the banner of a joint campmeeting of the Greater New York and Northeastern Conferences, something local officials said was a first for the two groups. Adventists came from all over the region – joined by officials of the Adventist Church world headquarters and the denomination’s North American Division, as well as from even farther afield – to mark the completion of an initial phase of urban evangelism and the welcoming of hundreds of new believers. At least 150 were baptized at the Nassau Coliseum venue, evangelist Mark Finley told Adventist Review, with many more in area churches the same morning. Estimates point to nearly 2,000 baptisms in the NY13 campaign before today’s event.
Hundreds more had been baptized before the event, as the New York City area hosted more than 400 evangelistic outreach events held by Adventist congregations. As Wilson said of the NY13 effort during his sermon, “This is not a spectator sport,” noting that several Adventist world church vice presidents and other world church leaders had conducted campaigns in the area as well.

At least one other division leader came to observe the results: Erton Köhler, president of the South American Division, and his wife Adriene were spotted among the worshippers Sabbath morning, no doubt happy that the “Arautos do Rei,” the Brazilian “King’s Heralds” quartet, were part of the morning’s worship music.

Music wasn’t the only cause for happiness that morning: several public officials came to publicly acknowledge the positive impact the Seventh-day Adventist Church had on the community. Mayor Wayne J. Hall, Sr., of neighboring Hempstead, New York, welcomed the Adventists, and Una S. T. Clarke, a former member of the New York City Council and mother of U.S. Rep. Yvette Clarke (D-Brooklyn) was also recognized for her presence at the event.

But the greatest praise for Seventh-day Adventists came from Bill De Blasio, who holds a citywide office as New York City Public Advocate, a job formerly known as president of the City Council.

“I represent all 8.4 million New Yorkers,” De Blasio said. “And I come to bring greetings and appreciation” for the work Adventists are doing in the community, he added.

“I was moved by the work of your young people after Hurricane Sandy struck. Every day, the Seventh-day Adventist Church is doing good works in the City of New York,” De Blasio said. He lauded Adventist efforts in promoting healthy living and said the church’s schools comprise “one of the greatest educational systems on Earth.”
De Blasio concluded saying, “Every day [Seventh-day Adventists] make us a better and a stronger city. I say, ‘God bless you.’”

Following the comments of these public officials, Adventist evangelist Mark Finley prayed for Hall, Clarke, and De Blasio, each of whom was also greeted by Wilson.

Wilson, in his morning message, emphasized that the June 29 event, though historic, isn’t the end of outreach here: “NY13 continues until Jesus comes!” he declared.

Speaking about the “little scroll” that would be sweet to taste but “bitter in the belly” (Revelation 10:8-9), Wilson linked the disappointment of the early disciples, who thought Jesus would establish the Kingdom of God during His time on Earth but instead was crucified, buried, and resurrected, with that of the early Millerites. The 1840s Millerites, out of whom the Seventh-day Adventist Church eventually emerged, initially thought that the 2,300-day prophecy of Daniel 8 pointed to the return of Christ to Earth in October of 1844.

Instead, the first-century disciples began preaching the gospel and, as Acts 17:6 records, “turned the world upside down.” So too, Wilson said, Seventh-day Adventists – the spiritual descendants of the disappointed Millerites – have reached out around the world bringing the three angels’ messages and the hope that Jesus is coming soon.

“This is not another church,” Wilson said. “The Seventh-day Adventist Church is a movement of God.”

Noting the church’s presence in over 200 nations and territories around the globe, Wilson added praise for the church’s media outreach, noting “Adventist World Radio is making a major impact around the world,” and praising church-owned Hope Channel and supporting television ministry 3ABN for their part in the media outreach.

Wilson again emphasized that the day’s event was not the “end” of outreach in the region. He told the thousands gathered for worship and celebration, “We came to New York to highlight ‘Mission to the Cities.’ This is not a culmination today in New York City: the work is continuing.”

Speaking with Adventist Review while waiting to baptize Olivera, Wilson said his own campaign was “an amazing experience in Greenwich Village. The audience stayed with us the whole time.”

Members of the congregation were impressed. Duane Cady, interim president of Atlantic Union College, a church-owned institution in South Lancaster, Mass., was visiting from his home in Syracuse, New York.

Cady, also a former board chairman of the American Medical Association, choked back tears as he contemplated the number of new Adventists being baptized.

“It’s amazing. We’re going forward, and I’m very happy, even thrilled,” he said.

As the baptisms continued, and an afternoon of music and testimony loomed, the joyfulness promised to remain for quite some time. [tedNEWS]
Adventist Church Sessions in Adriatic Union Conference

On 9 June 2013 the Adriatic Union Conference of the Seventh-day Adventist Church (AUC) held its sessions at the campus of the Union College in Maruševec, Croatia. Zlatko Musija, former President of the Croatia Conference, was elected Union President replacing Pastor Branko Bistrović. Pastor Neven Klajmer replaced Pastor Srećko Kuburić as Union Secretary, and Nebojša Milovanović was re-elected as the Union Treasurer for the next four years.

For the first time ever, the Croatia and Slovenia Conference sessions were held on the same day following the Union session. Pastor Drago Mojzeš was elected as the President of the Croatian Conference, replacing Zlatko Musija, and Pastor Zmago Godina was re-elected as President of the Slovenian Conference. At the same time, it was decided that Pastor Alban Matohiti, will replace Pastor Leo Nils Espana in 2015 as Albania Mission President.

The atmosphere at the session was positive and the leadership of Dr Bertil Wiklander, President of the Trans-European Division of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, helped all the meetings to run smoothly and concluded within one day. The Adventist Church in the AUC has 3,500 members and has experienced an increase of about 250 believers during the past five years.
‘It is my desire that the Church in the Adriatic Union will grow in love towards our Lord Jesus Christ and towards people in crisis and that we will carefully nurture Christian unity among the members of our Church. I would like to see a more practical spirituality among us that reaches the world in need, according to the gifts God has entrusted to us individually,’ commented Zlatko Musija, newly elected Union President. ‘It is my special desire to see our children and youth be more involved in the positive changes in the Church supported by more experienced members. This will be the best investment into the future of our Church,’ Pastor Musija concluded.

The consecration services for the Union Conference and Croatian Conference were held on June 15, 2013 in Maruševec, and for the Slovenian Conference on June 22, in Maribor. These were blessed opportunities to thank God for leading us safely so far to express our deep trust in His leadership for the future. All the programmes were enriched by good quality spiritual music claiming the promises of the Word of God. All proceedings were recorded by national radio and TV and communicated to the public in the programme ‘Duhovni izazovi’ (Spiritual Challenges) on June 22, 2013.

The question used as title above is used in the Introduction to Leadership Next by Eddie Gibbs. He is Professor of Church Growth at the School of World Mission at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, California.

The reason for his book was an interview on the web-site of Christianity Today regarding the topic of the emerging church – a concept of church which changes and adapts to the ever changing culture around us. He was asked a question that torments (or should torment) Seventh-day Adventist leaders today: ‘What are the reasons that so many young people under thirty-five leave the church?’ His answer was: ‘One factor is that they are reacting against a culture of control’. The editorial director of InterVarsity Press thought that this answer contained the seed for a book and prodded Gibbs to write. Leadership Next is the result.

‘The youth are reacting against a culture of control’. The statement kept me thinking. I had just presented a paper to the General Conference Global Mission Issues Committee on ‘Mission Challenges in a Post-Christian World’. In my research I had found numerous indications to support Gibb’s answer.

It is an uncomfortable truth that Adventist youth are being born, growing up and living in a post-Christian society (and where this is not yet the case in Europe, the signs indicate that it is on its way). People in this society erroneously think that Christianity is something of the past and a looser. Although we know they are mistaken, their beliefs form a powerful context which exposes young people to the mixed values of ever-changing ‘secular’ (‘there is evidence that God does not exist’) or ‘post-modern’ (‘we don’t know and can never know’) kinds of reasoning about the world and our place in it.

The changing culture today has certain constancies: a growing individualism and longing for freedom from authorities, be they parents, teachers, police, government, church, Bible, or God. Our youth are not immune to this. They, too, ‘react against a culture of control’. Church leaders today need to understand this and learn to communicate the invitation to leadership in a different way. Thus, young people will not respond to invitations to assume leadership if the church organisation simply tells them ‘we need more leaders’, or ‘this is what you have to be and do’, or ‘this is what the GC has decided’, or ‘this is what you need to learn at the Theological Seminary’.

What is it, then, that may bring good leaders in the future? Maybe it is their experience of being called by God. Maybe it is their experience of being called by Christ to be his disciples and followers. Maybe it is their experience of being grasped by the power of the Holy Spirit.

If so, how are we as leaders to encourage and empower them to seek these experiences, to acknowledge them, and to act on them? Modern youth respond to authentic people. Thus, a fundamental condition for being heard and trusted is that we – ourselves – have these daily and ongoing spiritual experiences and that we – ourselves – embody and demonstrate – with profound humility – a Christian leadership based on such foundations? Part of the new generation’s mind-set is a ‘reaction against a culture of control’. It means, among other things, that you will not be trusted as a leader because of your position or title (control), but because of your life and genuine personal experiences of God.

I take comfort from thinking that God owns the church and he has the power to make it into what he wants it to be. So, the plan of redemption or the mission of God will not fail. The key issue is a different one. It is personal: Will you and I fail as leaders, because we fail to know the mind-set of our youth and thus talk past them?

Recently, I was privileged to take part in the GC celebration of 150 years of the organised Seventh-day Adventist Church in Battle Creek, Michigan (1863-2013). It was stated repeatedly that this is a ‘sad’ occasion – because we are still here and Christ has not yet come. I tend to leave this with God, however. If my Saviour has not yet come, God will have his reasons for allowing that to happen. Another way to look at our 150th anniversary is to ask ourselves this important question:

What is it in the structures we have built up in our church over the past 150 years that is now an obstruction for the gospel to be received by our youth and the world around us? Many Adventists of all ages are now asking this question. I noticed how strong such sentiments were at the meeting of The One Project in Chicago (11-12 February, 2013), both from the pulpit and in the group discussions. Some answers to this vital question came to me as I read Gibbs’ thoughts on leaders being ‘called by God’ (pp. 131-134). This theme is what pastor Lowell Cooper is sharing with us this month and I believe that the following reflections will connect well with what says to us.

Gibbs brings seven areas of concern:
1. Discipleship: The essential deficit of the church today: its failure to adequately disciple the church members. Thus, he opens the brief section ‘Called by God’ by linking church leadership with the biblical concept of discipleship: ‘The concept of calling is essential to the life of discipleship’.

2. Christ’s Call is On-Going and Life-Changing: Gibbs says that ‘the call of Christ is not a once in a lifetime experience, but rather represents the ongoing response of the disciple’ and it is therefore the key to the ongoing growth as a disciple which generates new enthusiasm for continuing. ‘A life lived listening to the decisive call of God is a life lived before one audience that trumps all others – the Audience of One’. This principle applies to all followers of Christ, but especially to leaders ‘for God’s calling is the key to igniting a passion for the deepest growth and highest heroism in life’.

3. The Individual Calling Is Part of a Communal Calling. Gibbs then looks at how we abuse our calling: ‘Some leaders are so obsessed with their own sense of calling that they marginalize those around them or simply use them to serve their own ends’. This is of course contrary to the Bible, where disciples are called, not in isolation, but as part of ‘a community of the called’. Every leader must address the reverse side of being called by God, namely conceit, envy and greed.

4. The Unfortunate Distinction between Clergy and Laity Must Be Reformed from the Teaching of the Bible. God’s calling applies to the totality of God’s people. It is not restricted to the leaders. The myth of the ‘restricted call’ has crippled the church’s mission in the world. Traditionally, Gibbs says, ordained ministry or the mission field (more broadly labelled ‘full-time service’) has been regarded as ‘the highest calling’. Over time this has led to two distinct classes of Christians (Adventists): the clergy, those ordained to the pastorate, and the laity, the majority from which the few were selected.

‘Clergy’ means ‘called’ (kleros), and the term carries the unspoken implication that the laity is not called by God. As a result, the church is built around the call and gifting of this elite group surrounded by a marginalised laity. Such a separation breeds, on one hand, resentment and struggles for power and influence and, on the other hand, passivity and the avoidance of responsibility over spiritual issues which are regarded as the domain of the clergy. I see this in my beloved Adventist church today, and I hear the many lay people who feel marginalised by the ordained clergy – for example, in a break-out group discussion within the TED Executive Committee in 2006.

Thus, we must change our view of ordination and clergy, coming more into harmony with the Bible, if we want to mobilise the whole church for mission. We must change it for another reason, too: The young people of today, especially those who are leaving us, ‘react against a culture of control’. If they live and work in a church where all are called and sent on the mission of God – being ordained by their faith and baptism – they will see that the ordained pastor is one of them, that he leads them to seriously impact the world out there, not to benefit his own programs.

Gibbs says that ‘as we come to appreciate the comprehensive nature of God’s call, we must recognise that lay people are not amateur contributors within the structures of the institutional church. They must not be regarded as volunteers who support and run clergy-controlled programs. The term laity (laos) has to be restored to its original meaning – the people of God called to a priestly and apostolic ministry (2 Cor. 6:16; Tit. 2:14; 1 Pet. 2:9). We are all members of the laity, including those who are ordained as pastors. We have all been sent by our ascended Lord into the world to represent his present reign, herald his anticipated coming and invite people to join us in following him. In this view of the church, the people of God become culture-creating teams dispersed throughout society as salt, yeast and light.’

In this view of the church, there is no place for struggling with ‘how to activate the church members’. This is an issue created by the clergy-laity distinction! Neither would we see so many young people leave us, because they would be acknowledged as called by Christ already and their engagement in ministry to change the world would be their life!

Leaders in the church are formed among disciples of Christ, among a mobilised community of Christ, where young people, men and women are expected, encouraged and equipped to be ministers, with our without imposition of hands. And therefore, the attitude, life and leadership that you and I display as leaders will have an impact on where the new leaders will come from.

5. Replace Self-Fulfilment with God’s On-Going Call to Service. Gibbs calls attention to a serious consequence of an absence of a personal sense of call from God by church members: their focus on the need for personal fulfilment in order to find some sense of purpose for their lives.

Facts indicate a strong trend among secular and postmodern people towards self, and you have a keen interest in self-growth, self-development, self-realisation, and self-fulfilment. Even young Adventists being asked to serve often ask these days: ‘What’s in it for me?’ This is the fruit of not being part of a community of disciples of Christ where service is the focus of everything. They don’t understand what ‘service’ means because it has not been embodied by their church and it is virtually non-existent in the mass-media version of life. The deep and consistent teaching on ‘service’ in the Bible has not reached them.

Gibbs warns against looking within one-self and self-realisation and gives a quotation from J. E. White: ‘When personal fulfilment is allowed to take the place of calling, our lives become little more than exercises in self-indulgence. Ironically, we were created such that our deepest fulfilment is found as we submit to God’s calling on our life. The reason is simple: we are first and foremost to Someone, not to something or to somewhere.’

6. Leaders Must Embody that the Entire Church is Called by God and Show it in their Leadership Style. In order for the entire church to be motivated by a sense of divine call, Gibbs says, ‘it is imperative for its leaders to share this deep conviction, demonstrating their own personal call and God’s call to the whole congregation. In fact, church leaders cannot merely share it; they must embody it to an extraordinary degree. For some, this will require a gigantic shift away from a controlling style of leadership to one of affirmation and empowerment.’

7. Demonstrate the Joy of Service. All leaders know that leadership seldom consists of moving from one exhausting test and exhilarating triumph to the next. Most days consist of dealing with an ‘unending succession of mundane matters’. But the calling of God transforms life so that even the simple, everyday duties become invested with kingdom significance. For Adventist leaders, therefore, an essential ingredient in leadership should therefore be the joy of doing our work, because we are called by God.

In conclusion, as we step out in obedience to Christ’s leading of our leadership, let us bear in mind the positive approach that God’s call inspires in us by the Spirit:

• Look at the kingdom, not just your corner. • See beyond our circumstances to the presence of Christ with us. • Focus on successes, not problems. • Beware of exaggerating problems and empowering failures. • Keep a list of blessings and successes. • Look at reality with all its imperfections, not just exceptions. • Reconfirm your call rather than be swayed by complaints.

In Europe, Adventist Social Media Sparking Interest in Spirituality

04 June 2013 St. Albans, England [Ansel Oliver/ANN] The development of a social media strategy for outreach in Europe is paying off for Seventh-day Adventist Church leaders trying to connect with those potentially interested in learning about God.

The online community LIFEconnect, launched in 2010, offers content and discussion groups for various lifestyle topics. This year, the online project began offering live meeting events and streaming presentations. Follow-up statistics from March and April meetings show the project is drawing tens of thousands of viewers and participants, and in some cases motivating them to visit an Adventist Church.

The initiative is operated by the Adventist Church’s Trans-European Division, based in England. The region includes 22 countries and is home to slightly less than 83,000 Adventist Church members.

Currently, 13 countries in the division are participating in the LIFEconnect project, with another half dozen expected to join this year.
“Jesus told us to go where people are, and today more than 2.5 billion people are on the Internet,” said Miroslav Pujic, Communication & Media director for the Trans-European Division. “Digital roads are quickly taking us to millions to share the story of Jesus Christ.”

While other church regions are finding success with major media outreach – such as television production and distribution in countries including Romania and Brazil – LIFEconnect is the denomination’s first major ongoing outreach initiative solely using social media. Though small for now, division leaders are finding some success in highly secular regions, where other methods of evangelism have yielded few results.

“I know of the challenges and sacrifices made to implement this project, and it’s thrilling to see this method of outreach delivering such great results, said Williams Costa Jr., Communication director of the Adventist world church. “Our church has been using other methods of outreach, and that’s fine, but we need to keep being innovative in finding new ways to share our message.”

In Albania, home to only 200 church members, more than 20 visitors came to an Adventist Church following a streamed LIFEconnect event. The nightly program had about 1,100 viewers.

In Serbia, organizers noted 10,500 viewers of a streamed program in one weekend. While some were church members, many community members participated in the program and at an auditorium event.

In Macedonia, a streamed program gained 3,300 viewers over a weekend. A national pop music recording artist came to a live event.

In Montenegro, 80 percent of registered users are not members of the Adventist Church. Some 3,000 people viewed a weekend program in March, with three people coming to visit and Adventist Church the following Saturday.

“This is becoming the major outreach method in Serbia,” said Dragan Grujicic, LIFEconnect leader for the Southeast-European Union Conference, based in Serbia.

Pujic launched LIFEconnect in June of 2010, following two years of planning and development. Church administrations in participating countries were required to designate a Web pastor for the project, a network developer and volunteers.

The initiative is operated at the division by a small team of developers, a marketing manager and a content manager.
Pujic said roughly 32,000 people followed streamed programs online or participated in corresponding events in auditoriums in March and April.

He said the division plans to add the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, and several Nordic and Baltic countries to the LIFEconnect project by the end of this year. [tedNEWS]
Government Minister Visits ADRA-UK & Praises Grass Roots Work

23 May 2013 Watford, United Kingdom [Bert Smit, ADRA-UK CEO/BUC News] International Development Secretary, Justine Greening and Watford MP, Richard Harrington, visited the Adventist Development and Relief Agency (ADRA-UK) offices in Watford on Monday morning, 20 May 2013, for an extended one and a half hour tour and meeting.

The Secretary of State’s visit focused on ADRA-UK’s work in Myanmar (Burma) where the charity is implementing a project with funding from DFID that creates jobs and promotes income generation along with raising awareness of gender, HIV/AIDS, disaster risk reduction and environmental protection activities.

Ms Greening praised the efforts of ADRA and the work they are doing at a grass roots level. She said, “It was really, really helpful because the global poverty action fund is all about going beyond working with the biggest NGOs in Britain. We are working with medium-sized NGOs such as ADRA and much smaller ones.”

The visit put ADRA-UK in the spotlight and gave them an opportunity to highlight the excellent work that ADRA does around the world.

It was a first visit to the ADRA office for Mr Harrington. He expressed delight in having such a positive charity in his constituency.

"It’s very different from the old type of top-down aid where wealthy countries gave money to small countries and hoped that enough filtered through", he told reporters. "This is actually funding a project at grass roots and it’s helping people to set up their own business, survive themselves and build an infrastructure.”

Responding for ADRA-UK, Helia Mateus, chief financial officer said: "It's very encouraging everything the secretary of state said particularly highlighting that we work at grass roots.

"We work with the most vulnerable in the communities and she particularly appreciated what we do.

"We provide them with skills so they can generate some income to support their families, especially the young people who would otherwise have to leave the villages and head to the urban centres possibly to work in factories in the Thai border and sometimes never to be heard of again.”

ADRA-UK was established by the Seventh-day Adventist Church as a charity in 1999. It stands however in a long tradition of helping people in need. This year the Church in the UK is celebrating 100 years of collecting from door-to-door by our members to fund medical, educational and development work overseas.

Since its beginnings ADRA-UK has become a professional organisation focusing on long-term development and providing relief in emergencies.

On paper ADRA-UK is relatively small with just eight employees. However they are supported in the UK by over 50,000 people, young and old.
The link to the Seventh-day Adventist Church is important because not only does it give ADRA-UK the ethos for its work but also gives church members an opportunity to be involved in the wider scheme of social responsibility and humanitarian work.

According to the latest statistics ADRA as a network employs over 6,000 staff worldwide and helped 31.5 million people in 2012.

The small team here in the UK makes a significant difference, supported as it is by many thousands more and able to use the global reach of the ADRA network.

A video report of the visit is available here. Also reports in the Watford Observer and on Richard Harrington's constituency news page.
Delegates of the Swiss Bible Society elected Seventh-day Adventist theologian Reto Mayer as the organization’s president during their May 24 meeting, making him the first Adventist appointed to the post in the society’s 58-year history.

Mayer, associate treasurer of the Adventist world church’s Inter-European Division, based in Berne, Switzerland, has served as the society’s vice president since 2005. The Adventist Church joined the society in 1982.

“I hope that people see [the Bible] as an invitation from God, inviting them to live a personal relationship with Him,” Mayer told the Swiss Bible Society in a May 24 interview. “The distribution of the Bible is close to my heart, so it’s a pleasure for me to participate in this work.”

The Swiss Bible Society was founded in 1955 succeeding the former coalition of Swiss Bible Societies. Today, the society has 45 members, among others, cantonal evangelical-reformed churches, the Old-Catholic Church, independent evangelical churches, cantonal Bible societies, Christian societies and working groups in Switzerland that share the society’s charter of bible distribution.

The society promotes standards for translation, production and distribution of Bibles in Switzerland and the Principality of Liechtenstein.
The Swiss Bible Society works with more than 146 national bible societies united as the global United Bible Societies to bring the Bible in easy and modern language and form closer to the people. [tedNEWS]

U.S. Study of Adventists Finds vegetarians Live Longer

04 June 04, 2013 Silver Spring, Maryland, United States [Ansel Oliver/ANN] People who eat a vegetarian diet live longer than those who eat meat, according to a study of more than 70,000 Seventh-day Adventists.

A study published yesterday in JAMA Internal Medicine, a journal of the American Medical Association, said vegetarians experienced 12 percent fewer deaths over a six-year period of research.

The study, funded by the United States’ National Institutes of Health, was conducted by researchers at Loma Linda University, an Adventist institution in Southern California. Researchers tracked 73,308 Adventist Church members who follow the church’s dietary counsel of a plant-based diet to varying degrees.

Of the study’s participants, researchers said 5,548 were vegans, 21,177 were lacto-ovo vegetarians (also eating dairy products and eggs), 7,194 were vegetarians who also ate fish, and 4,031 ate meat infrequently. The rest of the study participants ate meat.

The findings confirm health benefits of eating a vegetarian diet, the lead study author Dr. Michael Orlich told Bloomberg News.

“People should take these kinds of results into account as they’re considering dietary choices,” Orlich told Bloomberg. “Various types of vegetarian diets may be beneficial in reducing the risk of death compared to non-vegetarian diets.”

Orlich, director of the preventive medicine residency program at Loma Linda University Medical Center, said the study was aided by studying subjects who have low rates of alcohol and tobacco use.

The Wall Street Journal today pointed out that the study said cancer still struck meat-eaters and vegetarians at similar rates. Also, a vegetarian meal doesn't automatically make it a healthy one. Deep fried foods contain high amounts of fat, and some meats are healthier than others.

Researchers pointed out that the health benefits were even more beneficial for men. It remained unclear why women were less affected by a vegetarian diet. Future research will examine gender-specific reactions to certain foods.

Dr. Kathleen Kuntaraf, associate Health Ministries director for the Adventist world church, said a vegetarian diet is part of living a holistic, healthy life.

“More and more people are recognizing our principles from 150 years ago are truly scientific,” she said.

Seventh-day Adventists have long advocated a vegetarian diet. The founder of Loma Linda’s School of Public Health overcame resistance in the health community in the 1940s to produce a landmark study on the benefits of a vegetarian diet, discovering that such a diet indeed contained sufficient protein, among other benefits.

In recent years, Adventists have been noted as one of the longest living people groups ever studied. In 2008, “Blue Zones” book author Dan Buettner wrote extensively about the health principles of Adventists and their longer, healthier lifespans. [tedNEWS]

04 June 2013 Bracknell, United Kingdom [Kirsty Watkins] The academic success of twenty-nine students from Newbold College of Higher Education was celebrated on Sunday, 2 June 2013 at the College’s Awards Ceremony.

The Mayor of Bracknell Forest, Councillor Mrs Jan Angell, and other local politicians joined over 300 staff, alumni and friends of the College at the ceremony in the Newbold Church entrance.

These students, who represent 17 different countries, have successfully completed the requirements for the College’s programmes in business, arts and humanities, media arts, and theology, which are offered in partnership with a number of international Seventh-day Adventist education providers.

Dr Friedbert Ninow (Rector) and Dr Johannes Hartlapp (Dean of Theology) represented Theologische Hochschule Friedensau – the Seventh-day Adventist state-accredited higher education institution in Germany – and attended the ceremony to celebrate the first graduates from the partnership between Newbold and Friedensau.
The guest speaker was Dr Edward O. Blews Jr, President of the Council for Christian Colleges and Universities, an association of Christian institutions with 116 member campuses in the USA and 69 affiliate campuses (of which Newbold is one) in 25 countries outside the USA.

Dr Blews addressed the audience on the theme Carpe Diem (loosely translated as Seize the Day), and shared Christ’s own eternal perspective from Matthew 6.33-34: ‘Seek first his kingdom and his righteousness and all these things will be given to you … Do not worry about tomorrow … Each day has enough trouble of its own.’

Dr Blews reminded the graduating students that God is calling them into a waiting world, playing on the College’s name in urging them to ‘go forth with “New Boldness” in serving Christ and in serving humanity – His creation. The world awaits – seize the day to which God calls you,’ he urged.

Dr Philip Brown (Principal); Dr John Baildam (Deputy Principal); Pastor Patrick Johnson (Senior Pastor, Newbold Church); and Dr Daniel Duda (Director of Education, Trans-European Division of the Seventh-day Adventist Church) were among those who participated in the ceremony as part of the platform party.

Newbold College of Higher Education is a member of the Seventh-day Adventist higher education network and is located in Binfield, Berkshire, UK. Newbold offers programmes in theology and religion, business studies, liberal arts and English for Speakers of Other Languages.

Adventist-Muslim Relations in Bosnia

Adventist-Muslim Relation Associate Director at the General Conference, Petras Bahadur, visited Sarajevo between 23-27 May 2013, holding number of workshops and seminars. Sarajevo is the capital city of Bosnia and Herzegovina, a country within South-East European Union of the Seventh-day Adventist Church with the Muslim presence of about 2 million people and Seventh-day Adventist church membership of about 500.

Bahadur’s visit brought manifold blessings. Majority of his time was spent in educating members and church leaders, however, he also took the time to get to know some of the local people and meet with the core team of the church to make future plans.

At the meeting held on Friday night, which was open to everyone, Bahadur expounded on why Jesus had to come, and then on Saturday morning, he shared with us ideas on how we can achieve more effective Adventist-Muslim relations.
Saturday night and Sunday seminar focused on Muslim beliefs and common misconceptions. The objective was to train the participants on how to build better relationships with Muslims. One of the techniques demonstrated during the training involved role playing, but the main focus was on prayer and creating friendships.

Many members of the Sarajevo Seventh-day Adventist church, who have Muslim spouses, as well as Muslim co-workers, supervisors, neighbours and friends, found this seminar very useful. Their Senior Pastor Pavle Runić commented: “We are very excited! New ground is being broken here! We gained valuable knowledge, which we didn't possess before.”

Bahadur is planning to have a series of public presentations in Sarajevo this coming autumn. In addition to that, the local team is planning to organise cooperative parallel presentations with Muslim leaders. Topics of interest will include: Social justice in the Qur’an and the Bible; People of the book; Diet according to the Qur’an and the Bible; and Prayer in the Qur’an and the Bible. [ted/NEWS]
"Together in Mission" - XXI Session of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Poland

04 June 2013 Podkowa Leśna, Poland [Daniel Maikowski, tedNEWS] Over 160 delegates from across Poland took part in the XXI Session of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, which took place from 30th May to 1st June 2013. It was an opportunity to take stock of the activities of the Polish Church in the last five years. The assembled delegates were also electing a new Board of Directors and the Executive Committee of the Church.

The Session, that lasted three days, resulted in election of a new president, Pastor Jaroslaw Dziegielewski, and the reelection of Marek Rakowski, Executive Secretary, and Maximilian Szklorz, Treasurer.

Among the delegates present were representatives of the Trans-European Division of the Seventh-day Adventist Church (TED), Pastor Bertil Wiklander, TED President and Pastor Raafat Kamal TED Field Secretary.

‘I want to thank Pastor Pawel Lazar for his leadership during two terms.’ said Pastor Wiklander. ‘He has been a valuable colleague in the international work of the church and he leaves his office with a positive development both in terms of evangelism and finances. At the same time I welcome Pastor Jaroslaw Dziegielewski as the new President of the Polish Union. He has several years of experience in leading two conferences and has also served as conference secretary-treasurer. Pastor Dziegielewski is a humble and spiritual man, but also a gifted leader and pastor. I look forward to co-operating with him. The Session also meant that the church in Poland has taken a big step forward in upgrading its constitution and bringing it in harmony with the international Seventh-day Adventist Church policy. I have felt a positive spirit in the church in Poland which I pray will deepen and inspire many to take up the mission of God in Poland. May God bless his church in Poland!’ Pastor Wiklander concluded.

Hearing the Call

“All I heard the voice of the Lord, saying: ‘Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?’ Then I said, ‘Here am I! Send me.’”

The ancient prophet is caught up in a dazzling display of light and sound. Riveting in its intensity. Frightening in its majesty. He feels awful and awe-filled at the same time. His call, though couched in generality, is unmistakable, his response unequivocal.

Most people experience the call of God in less dramatic ways. In whatever way it comes a call from God can be a fearful thing. If it strikes us as strange, unusual or difficult the response might be, “Here am I. Send my sister.” On the other hand, a person can rush ahead of God, conjure up a call based on imagination and then perform a self-appointment.

Mark Buchanan identifies several questions for thoughtful reflection about hearing and heeding God’s call. These include: Am I running from something? Is it a genuine call or simply a desire? Does this fit who I am and how God shaped me? Is it for now or later? Do others independently perceive it? Is it rooted in the deeper call of God?

The reality is that all are called. Called first to a life that glorifies God, a life that proceeds out of committed discipleship to Jesus Christ. Within that calling there may come something more specific dealing with a career, a ministry, a temporary role or simply a once-in-a-lifetime act. But all of these are cradled in God’s call to holiness and service. So, whoever you are, wherever you are, you have been called by God.

God’s general call is for everyone. God’s specific calls cover a vast array of roles and persons. Consider for a moment a short list to illustrate the variety of God’s calls:

Abraham—a man with no possessions and no progeny called to be the father of the faithful Moses—an 80-year old shepherd called to lead a band of slaves to nationhood Samuel—a little child commissioned to bear the message of God to the one in highest spiritual office of the day Daniel and his friends—captives in a heathen empire called to bear unflinching witness to the King of the universe Lydia—a businesswoman provides housing for the evangelistic team in Philippi Paul and Silas—whose suffering as prisoners in Philippi leads to the jailor’s conversion

And then there is a nameless slave girl, kidnapped from her home, forced into domestic service for the wife of a military commander, caught in circumstances she did not choose and could not change. Then one day she learns that the master of the house is himself caught in circumstances he did not choose and could not change—Naaman has leprosy! And instead of rejoicing at his misfortune this little maid merely voices a wish that her master might find healing at the house of the prophet. Naaman goes, is healed and becomes a worshipper of God.

A witness to God and His kingdom can arise from any occupation. There is no hierarchy of spiritual professions. The preacher or Bible worker is not more important than the taxi driver, housewife, or parking lot attendant when it comes to being light. It is not your place in the wage scale, nor your place in the organization; it is not your brains nor your beauty; it is not your degrees nor your seniority that qualifies you to be light. It is your connection with Jesus Christ.

Remember the challenge of Jesus: “If anyone thirsts, let him come to Me and drink. He who believes in Me, as the Scripture has said, out of his heart will flow rivers of living water.”

Perhaps what is urgently needed in the Church today is the realization that every kind of work done for the sake of human community and the mission of God is a consecrated calling. We must reject the idea that ministerial work is more holy than teaching math or fixing machinery. We reject this idea because it masks the assumption that if I am unable, unfit or uncalled to ministerial work my role is basically that of a bystander in the mission of God.

Martin Luther strongly opposed the view of vocation prevalent during his time—the idea that only work in and for the church could qualify as God’s calling.

“It is pure invention [fiction] that Pope, bishops, priests and monks are called to the ‘spiritual estate’ while princes, lords, artisans and farmers are called to the ‘temporal estate.’ This is indeed a piece of deceit and hypocrisy. Yet no one need be intimidated by it, and that for the reason: all Christians are truly of the spiritual estate, and there is no difference among them except that of office…We are all consecrated priests by baptism, as St. Peter says: ‘You are a royal priesthood and a priestly realm’ (1 Pet. 2:9). The Apocalypse says: ‘Thou hast made us to be kings and priests by thy blood’ (Rev 5:9-10).\(^5\)

We must take care lest we fall victim to the idea that we serve God best when we are in church, when we are praying or reading the Bible, or giving Bible studies or handing out tracts and that our work is merely a necessity to provide resources to serve Him when we have completed our allotted task or shift of duty. Our daily work is ultimately an act of worship to the God who called us and who equipped us to do it.

“Therefore, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.”\(^6\)

These three ideas form the context for a Christian’s sense of calling: 1) We are called first to be children of God, 2) The means by which we earn a living is the platform from which we honour God and advance His mission, 3) Doing our work faithfully and well, whatever it be, is our way of transforming a career into a calling.

Eugene Peterson recounts the story of the fourth century church father Gregory of Nyssa whose brother Basil had arranged for him to be made bishop of Cappadocia. “Gregory objected,” Peterson writes. “He didn’t want to be stuck in such an out-of-the-way place. His brother told him he didn’t want Gregory to obtain distinction from his church but to confer distinction upon it.” Is this not what Christ wants for us as well? To seek the good of the small places in which he has placed us and to confer distinction upon them by serving him with humility there? The path of glory is often an obscure one. It is the way of the cross.”\(^7\)

Lowell C Cooper, Vice-President of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists

In a church and a world calling for effective leaders, it is appropriate to ask once again, where do good leaders come from? Do we find them through some thorough screening process? Do we forge them through a variety of experiences? Can we train them by carefully designed coursework or degrees? And how long do we wait for their performance to show whether they are the real deal – someone with discernment and wisdom whom others will follow.

As part of my responsibilities at Loma Linda University, I chair many search committees. These are small groups of peers and colleagues who come together to select a new Dean, Vice President, or other significant leader for our institution. I am always fascinated by the discussions that occur. First, the committee spends time talking about the characteristics they would want to see in this person. When the discussion is complete, we have created an ideal candidate that we all realize can never be found. Then we start putting forward names. The list often starts with obvious choices - those second in command, associates, or recognized leaders on campus. There always a few who nominate themselves, though my experience has been they are usually not the best candidates.

And the discussion begins. What is the balance of characteristics that make the best leaders? Do you want charisma over character, energy over tolerance and reflection? How important is knowledge in their particular discipline? And what about wisdom? Where does it come from? Gradually, over a number of meetings, the issues are carefully and prayerfully discussed and a consensus starts to emerge. Opinions change when listening to others. The preferred candidate of one meeting may move down the list after reflection at the next meeting. Finally a “short list” is selected and interviews scheduled. And even then, after hours of discussion of each person’s history and references, opinions change based on how they present themselves, how they respond to key questions, and their general demeanour and attitude.

It is very clear that the intangibles of who we want in a leadership position are more than a set of good credentials or knowledge in their field. It includes their disposition, their attitude to life and those they will work with, and the approach they demonstrate to issues. I have come to call the best candidates the “reluctant leaders.” They are the ones who are not overly confident, but quietly competent. They show a reflective attitude, not easy answers. They are not seeking the job, but are willing if asked.

Jim Collins, in his bestselling book “Good to Great”, talks about this kind of corporate leader.

“We were surprised, shocked really, to discover the type of leadership required for turning a good company into a great one...Self-effacing, quiet, reserved, even shy – these leaders are a paradoxical blend of personal humility and professional will.”

Those are the Level 5 leaders that Collins found could truly make a difference in his or her organization. Reserved... Shy... Personal humility... - not exactly what one usually thinks of as a leader. Yet they are the ones who were able to gather ideas and people around them to move their organization forward.

So where does that place our church in this process of developing leaders? How do we grow, identify and appoint leaders with those characteristics? Does our current system of selecting leaders really do that?

I was attending a division level meeting recently in which the president was very clear on why he wanted each union and mission to become conferences. “Because then you will be responsible to the people. You will have to defend your actions and decisions to those who elected you”. Yet, does even the democratic process of selecting leaders guarantee results? When is a person’s popularity a barrier to making the tough decisions that are often necessary? Can a church, an institution, an organization, prepare leaders effectively? Or is this a matter of finding the right genetic material and polishing to what we want?

My impression is that the most effective leaders come with the basic ingredients already on board, a result of genetics and their early training as a child. They are then moulded by experience to have the characteristics we want them to have. It is the difference between knowledge and wisdom. Knowledge comes from many sources and is absolutely essential. But wisdom only comes when that knowledge is refined in the context of life’s experiences. It starts making reactions more intuitive, guided by forgotten experiences that left their imprint on that person’s character.

One strategy that we are trying to institute at Loma Linda is for each leader on campus to identify potential successors to their position. Each year they are expected to confidentially submit to their leader the names of 2-3 people they feel could take their place, either now or in the future. This is tough work and sobering for all of us. Yet it forces a mindset that is crucial to recognize that organizations will... move on after us, and though things may be done differently, they will continue.

A key part of this strategy is to then seek to grow these potential successors to prepare them for future responsibility. Usually this must be done without their knowledge, as it often destroys a person’s relationships with peers if others think they have an inside track or have already been selected for an advanced position. So quietly and without most being aware of the strategy, these people are placed on committees, given assignments, and appointed to responsibilities that will expose them to the kinds of ideas and thinking that are important to the organization. If the initial supposition was correct, they perform well and can be given other responsibilities. But occasionally, characteristics of that person emerge that raise questions about their skill or even character. Both kinds of information are critical in identifying future leaders. And I often see the list of potential successors change as more exposure is provided.

Finally, I want to comment on the art of mentoring. I have benefited enormously through the years by having someone whom I respect be brave enough to comment on my behaviour or decisions in various situations. This is an incredible gift to another to have that kind of discussion. Too often we shrug our shoulders and hide our thoughts, thinking we don’t want to hurt our relationship or discourage a friend.

But the courage to confront, to have a crucial conversation with another, is one of the most valuable steps in developing leaders. It is the best kind of education, usually creating memories that stick in your mind for years. It doesn’t need to always be a comment about a problem, but can be equally effective as an affirmation of something positive that was observed. This is a responsibility we all can share.

Our church needs and deserves the best leaders we can find. Intentional strategies to develop individuals with the character and insights to truly be authentic leaders are essential. May God give us the courage and commitment to do this patiently, deliberately, and with precision.

By Richard H. Hart, MD, DrPH - President, Loma Linda University

Recently I spoke with the CEO/President of a very large corporation employing nearly 100,000 associates and generating annual revenue in the billions. To be successful, such a leader must be astute in finance, well-versed in emerging trends, and decisive when taking actions—a true leader. Additionally, such individuals are often accused of being ruthless and driven, with an eye on the bottom line, and highly competitive.

In light of this general perception I noticed his response to a question I posed: “Yes,” he said, “doing the right thing, is important. We have to start there, and then find a way forward.”

I have concluded that doing the right thing matters a great deal in all successful organizations and must be practiced by their leaders, including church leaders. It means doing the right thing by the people we employ, in the selection process, remuneration decisions, work expectations, and the support we provide. It is generally easier simply to do what we have always done and follow past patterns. But is that the right thing for our associates? It also extends to management of our financial resources? It seems so obvious that we must do the right thing, and yet it is easy to follow a path of convenience, of least resistance, of past practices, rather than identifying the right thing when we spend funds. And what about planning and programming? Certain programs are expected of us from both the top and the bottom of our organization, but are they right for the organization now? Every action, plan, decision contemplated by leadership should ask before implementation: But is it the right thing to do?

How do we know what is the right thing? Is there an organizational policy or a text in scripture that tells us that, or do we just follow our instinct (as the old quip goes, “I know the right thing when I see it”).

I believe there are some tests we can give to our leadership activities that help us discover what the right thing is. Here are some I have used.

1. Will our associates become better people, more effective and mature workers, successful in the organization, and prepared to take on larger responsibilities because of our leadership decisions? At a very practical level, are we surrounding ourselves with people equipped and able to succeed us when the time comes?

2. Does the principle of the talents in Jesus’ parable describe the way we allocate funds? Specifically do we expect growth from all our investments of funds, or are we satisfied if we simply do not incur losses? In church organizations, these funds are donated by faithful believers, and surely leaders are not charged simply to protect the principal, but to grow its value through additional services rendered, more people helped, new initiatives in teaching and preaching the gospel? Can that be said about all our financial appropriations?

3. Leaders are constantly confronted with the question of what to keep and what to change! Programs, departments, services, activities are crossing our desks daily. Do we keep them all (because—well there they are), or do we stop doing certain things so we can introduce new things (innovate)? The temptation to keep everything we have done before, and be cautious about innovation is particularly great for Christian leaders whose resources keep coming primarily in the form of tithe and offerings. Is that doing the right thing, or are we to be change agents like the first Christian leaders beginning with Christ himself and his greatest apostle Paul?

There is one more test we may consider, and that I have borrowed from international management/leadership guru, Gary Hamel in his latest book on leadership, What Matters Now. In the short chapter entitled “Reclaiming the Noble,” Hamel proposes that leadership which is merely successful, though comforting to stockholders or church members respectively, lacks the excitement of leadership that is also “reclaiming the noble.” On Hamel's roster of such leaders are Michelangelo, Galileo, Jefferson, Gandhi, William Wilberforce, Martin Luther King, Jr. Mother Theresa, Sir Edmund Hillary. Others are listed on my church roster, such as E.G, White, J.N. Andrews, Ana and Fernando Stahl, the Murdoch family, Ben Carson, et al. What is unique about them? They inspire by reclaiming in their time something we have nearly forgotten in ours, as key leadership goals, namely "beauty, truth, wisdom, justice, charity, fidelity, joy, courage and honor." They reclaimed the noble.

Doing the right thing in leadership, especially Christian leadership, is not complete until it has captured the noble—those goals far beyond (but not apart from) the bottom line. These are the real values of Christian leadership, and the good news is that these values are not incompatible with organizational success. In fact, they may enhance it.
Reflection on Christian Leadership

Jesus is and must always be our great example as a leader. The reasons for this have been beautifully summarized by Laurie Beth Jones.1 She calls attention to three simple premises:

1. One person trained twelve human beings who went on to so influence the world that time itself is now recorded as being before (BC) or after (AD.) his existence.

2. This person worked with a staff that was totally human and not divine ... a staff that in spite of illiteracy, questionable backgrounds, fractious feelings, and momentary cowardice went on to accomplish the tasks he trained them to do. They did this for one main reason—to be with him again.

3. His leadership style was intended to be put to use by any of us.

Other authors challenge our Christian leadership in broader terms. What key principles actually characterise a Christian leader? Let me draw on Charles Sibthorpe, A Man Under Authority: Qualities of Christian Leadership (1984). Your answers to his nine questions will describe your leadership:

1. Are you a servant?
Sibthorpe’s home was sometimes used as a centre for young people. He says: “I was always interested in who would volunteer to clear up the bar or give the place a coat of paint. It is interesting that those who were the most ready to serve took up positions of leadership later.”

One of the key principles of leadership is the willingness to be a servant. Jesus said: “whoever wants to be- come great among you must be your servant, and whoever wants to be first must be your slave” (Matthew 20:26-27).

2. Are you humble?
A Christian leader knows he is incapable of doing his work in his own strength. Paul described his mission to Corinth like this: “When I came to you, brothers, I did not come with eloquence or superior wisdom as I proclaimed to you the testimony about God. For I resolved to know nothing while I was with you except Jesus Christ and him crucified. I came to you in weakness and fear, and with much trembling.” (1 Cor. 2:1-3)

Moses, when he received God’s call to leadership, said: “O Lord, please send someone else to do it.” (Exodus 4:13)

Gideon’s response to his call was similar: “But Lord,” Gideon asked, “how can I save Israel? My clan is the weakest in Manasseh, and I am the least in my family.” (Judges 6:15)

This attitude of humility is the condition for spiritual power. As a leader, Paul recognised that “When I am weak, then I am strong.” (2 Cor. 12:10)

3. Do you speak the word of God?
“Remember your leaders, who spoke the word of God to you” (Heb. 13:7). There are a lot of words in the church today. But are they effective? Jesus only spoke the words God gave him: “The words I have spoken to you are spirit and they are life” (John 6:63).

Human reason and eloquence, good as they may be, have a limited effect and only last until someone produces a better and more convincing argument. But God’s word is spiritual power that transforms human lives.

Paul said: “My message and my preaching were not with wise and persuasive words, but with a demonstration of the Spirit’s power, so that your faith might not rest on men’s wisdom, but on God’s power.” (1 Cor. 2:4-5)

A leader must be a man or woman of God’s word.

4. Do you live your message and values?
“Remember your leaders...Consider the outcome of their way of life” (Heb. 13:7). Life speaks more powerfully than words. All we say or preach cannot be fulfilled perfectly in our lives, but a man will apply the word of God to himself first, and only then will he be at liberty to share it with others.

Paul said: “For this reason I am sending to you Timothy, my son whom I love, who is faithful in the Lord. He will remind you of my way of life in Christ Jesus, which agrees with what I teach everywhere in every church.” (1 Cor. 4:17)

This is all a result of faith in God’s grace. Paul said: “But by the grace of God I am what I am, and his grace to me was not without effect. No, I worked harder than all of them— yet not I, but the grace of God that was with me.” (1 Cor. 15:10)

A leader is a man of God’s grace.
5. Do you operate by faith?
“Remember your leaders...and imitate their faith” (Heb. 13:7). A Christian leader has a faith that others want to imitate. Faith points to God who controls our lives and invites his power to lead.

6. Are you followed?
Jesus said: “Come, follow me ... and I will make you fishers of men”. Then, we are told: “At once they left their nets and followed him” (Mk. 1:17-18).
Leaders in business have followers, because they pay them. Leaders in the church are different. The people are not always being paid, and are not under any compulsion to submit. If they are paid employees, they will not get more pay if they do what you want them to do. The whole dynamic is based on the relationship between God and man, not on reward.
A leader’s leadership will be tested by the way people respond to it. A leader who leads by the power and authority of God will be followed. If no one is following, the leader is not a leader.
This does not mean that a leader should seek to please the people. If you are a man-pleaser, you will be moved out from under God’s authority. A true leader does the will of God, which may not always please.
At times, a true leader is surrounded by people who have lost their faith in God and who do not wish to do God’s will. God will then call him to lead others.

7. Are you fruitful?
God plants leaders with the anticipation of reaping a rich harvest of fruit in the lives of his people. Paul referred to certain followers as his “dear children, for whom I am again in the pains of childbirth until Christ is formed in you” (Gal. 4:19).
Fruitfulness in God’s people is the reflection of Christ in their lives. God does it by His Holy Spirit, in order to glorify him and to be a blessing to others.

8. Are you ahead of the people?
If you are to be followed, you need to be ahead of your people. Paul was bold enough to say: “Follow my example, as I follow the example of Christ” (1 Cor. 11:1).
Leaders live under the responsibility of continually pressing on with God. It is often a lonely path, because you are breaking new ground for others to walk through later, but you yourself will only be following the path that Jesus has already walked. Through discouragement and fatigue, leaders often find they have not remained out in front and so their people have come to a standstill. When the church stands still, the leaders are standing still. You need to be ahead of the people. That is leadership. Being ahead also means to listen to your people, understanding their needs and ensuring that you bring God’s saving word to them which will fill them with hope, inspiration, and a will to go where God through your leadership wants them to go.

What is the fundamental, real key to all these questions? I have taken great strength from a passage in Henri Nouwen’s precious little book In the Name of Jesus: Reflections on Christian Leadership (1989). He says as he comments on Jesus’ last conversation with Simon Peter: Before Jesus appointed Peter as a shepherd, he asked him: “Simon, son of John, do you love me more than the others do?” He asked him again: “Do you love me?” And a third time: “Do you love me?” We must see this question as the crucial question for our entire Christian leadership, for it is that question which both saves us from opportunism and gives us a true self-esteem. The question is not: How many people take you seriously? How much will you accomplish? Can you demonstrate any results? But the question is: Do you love Jesus? ______________

Church in the Community

God has always had His appointed representatives to show His character and love in the community. It was for this purpose that He raised the Seventh-day Adventist church and it is His purpose in calling you and I to be leaders. How can we as leaders CONNECT with our church members and assist them as they interact with the community to uplift Christ in very practical ways?

Perhaps the following acrostic will offer helpful suggestions:

C = COMMITMENT to God and His Service –
Connect with God through His Word, prayer and meditation in finding what He would have you and I do in our respective communities. This relationship, essential for a Christian leader, is the basis of any positive association in the community. Jesus knew this - we see examples in the gospel where Jesus got up early in the morning and went to a solitary place to commune with His Father. Jesus had to have His quiet time with His Father. He recognized the importance of prayer to keep him in touch with His Father’s mission. We will not be able to help others without first being connected to the Life giver. Engaging in anything which we feel is important takes time, effort and commitment.

O = OBSERVE opportunities for service within our communities - social events, business meetings, school programmes, community initiatives. Sometimes we are so busy looking after ourselves that we forget about others and the real reason we are on this earth. Take time to reach out, to see what is happening in your community, listen to the hidden cries of someone in emotional pain, understand where someone is coming from, interact socially with our communities. Allow God to speak to you as you observe and follow His leading. Remember God has given us two eyes, two ears and one mouth. When we use our mouths, it is hard to observe. Let us use our eyes and ears at least twice as much as we use our mouths.

N = NON-JUDGEMENTAL – Connect without judging or condemnation while not giving up our values or principles. God has blessed us and provides us with understanding and insights into His Word. Unfortunately, at times this blessing has caused us to feel we are superior to other groups or individuals. This is not the case – we should not consider ourselves any better than the addict or drunkard. We are both loved by God equally. In actuality, being ‘keepers of the flame’ we have a solemn responsibility to uphold the standards and principles which have been given to us by God. To disregard them is to actually put ourselves in a worse position. It is important for us to leave the judging to God but to share with the community the love God showed us. No one likes someone who is always critical or judgemental. As a church supporting the community, let us show much love and less critical judging.

N = NURTURE church members and community. Principles for this are found in Christ's servant-leadership. "The Saviour mingled with men as one who desired their good. He showed His sympathy for them, ministered to their needs, and won their confidence. Then He bade them, 'Follow Me.'" MH 144 This was no hurried process but that of leading the people along at a pace with which they could identify and respond appropriately. Allow the Holy Spirit to convince and convict others. Our responsibility is to humbly share what God has done for us.

E = EXEMPLIFY the character of Christ to our church members. Following the principles of Christ's ministry includes not only the way in which one works but also who one is in Christ. The Holy Spirit will develop the needed fruits for us to be like Jesus -- "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control." Galatians 5:22,23 NKJV The familiar saying, ‘Actions speak louder than words’ is true and this influence of the leader encourages the church members to exemplify the fruits in their lives and to their community.

C = CARE for the marginalized and oppressed, the addicts and depressed, the rejected and the broken-hearted, the searching. Also step out of your COMFORT ZONE in associating with those of wealth, power, great learning and influence. We have received riches, blessings and knowledge, which are far above any earthly wisdom. If we will humbly share the goodness of the Lord, we will bring comfort and encouragement, leading to a desire in many to know the wonderful God we serve. We live in a secular society. We are not to copy their lifestyle and methods but seek to address the community needs in a real and lasting way. We are to uplift Jesus so that He will draw all men unto Him. John 12:32 refers to Christ's crucifixion but also has an application to our invitation to have people look to Jesus, accept Him as Lord and Saviour and be saved.

T = TENDER TEAMWORK on social issues and needs in the community – Connect and support each other in different social ministries. The needs in our communities are many and each of us has a role in community work. It is sometimes difficult for people enthusiastic in their service for others and filled with good ideas to accept different ideas and work as a team but teamwork is crucial in exploring needs, methods and cohesive progress, ownership and loyalty in the church and community. Micah 6:8 counsels us, "He has shown you, O man, what is good and what does the Lord require of you but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God?" Together in Christ our communities will be transformed.

"Make Christ's work your example. Constantly He went about doing good--feeding the hungry and healing the sick. No one who came to Him for sympathy was disappointed. The commander of the heavenly courts, He was made flesh and dwelt among us, and His lifework is an example of the work we are to do.- Manuscript 55, 1901. {WM 53.1}
