9 Things I Learned at the Columbia Union Camporee

1. Rain Comes With The Territory.
Thursday it rained, Friday it rained and Sabbath it rained, though not as much. Though I cringed at driving and walking through the mud and ran for cover during intermittent showers, most of the Pathfinders shrugged off the bad weather. Rain comes with the territory, they said while donning ponchos, umbrellas and other raingear. According to Harriett Ponder, a member of Potomac Conference’s Seabrook Seahawks in Lanham, Md., Pathfinders learn to “stick it out in the rain, snow and cold!”

And stick it out they did. Some 1,600 Pathfinders braved the weather at the Columbia Union Conference “Choose Without Compromise” Camporee held last week at Camp Mohaven in Danville, Ohio.—Story by Taashi Rowe

Donovan Ross Blogs About the Teachers’ Convention in Nashville

As I huddle in our registration booth with the staff from the Columbia Union Conference Office of Education, I am somewhat apprehensive. Of the 6,500 educators expected to arrive from all across the North American Division, some 500 are from the Columbia Union. We pray and prepare to greet and register them (there’s already one waiting patiently). With that many people trying to get registered, I expect our team of six will encounter our fair share of challenges.

It’s mid-afternoon and my job has changed from greeting and directing our educators to running back and forth from one end of the convention center to the other, trying to ensure that they have appropriate lodging. At 6:30 p.m. we move into the main auditorium for the opening session, one of nine such general sessions that will be presented over the next four days. One attendee shares with me that she was blessed after hearing Carlton Byrd, DMin (pictured), speaker and director for Breath of Life Ministries, and could not wait to see and hear what was in store for the remainder of the convention.—Blog by Donovan Ross, photo by Dan Weber

NAD’s “Changed” Initiative to Target Young Latinos

Through an evangelistic initiative called “Changed: Real Lives in a Real World,” the North American Division (NAD) will target more than 30 million second- and third-generation Hispanic youth with the three angels’ messages. Through the yearlong initiative, which launches this fall, NAD leaders hope to challenge the youth to accept Jesus as their Lord and Savior.

As part of the yearlong initiative, the 2012 Latino Youth NET includes several weekend training events and a live satellite broadcast in Spanish, October 13–20, from...
Orlando via Esperanza TV and in English, November 3–10, via the Hope Channel. Find out more at facebook.com/changedlatinoyouth, vimeo.com/changedlatinoyouth and youtube.com/changedlatinoyouth. Resources are available through adventsource.org. Pictured below is Sandra Juarez, who along with Manny Cruz, NAD’s Youth Ministries associate director, will host the program.—Story by Laura Sámano
Members of Allegheny West Conference’s (AWC) Korean church in Columbus, Ohio, are thankful to have satisfied their mortgage after 10 years of diligent sacrifice. During their recent mortgage-burning ceremony, Pastor Choong Lee joyfully welcomed friends from Korean churches in Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana to their sanctuary. Carl Rogers (center), assistant to the AWC president, delivered the keynote address, exhorting parishioners to keep God at the center of God’s house. The high Sabbath celebration also featured celestial harmonies from the church choir and orchestra and ended with a fellowship meal.—Story by Cynthia Moore

Ohio Members Develop Ministerial Skills at ACS Symposium

More than 50 men and women (some pictured) from across Ohio and neighboring states spent a weekend at Ohio Conference’s Worthington church developing their skills for ministry, hoping to learn how to better meet the needs in their local communities. Each participant could select to attend one of the following three seminars: “Tutoring Underprivileged Children,” taught by Sandra Brown, specialist for the North American Division (NAD) Adventist Community Services; “Community Development” led by Gaspar Colón, PhD, dean of the School of Arts and Social Sciences at Washington Adventist University in Takoma Park, Md.; and “Disaster Response Projects,” taught by Joe Watts, NAD Disaster Response coordinator. A group of young adults from the Ebenezer Haitian church in Columbus took the tutoring seminar. Click here to find out why.—Story by Monte Sahlin

Renovations Update Takoma Academy Campus

When students at Takoma Academy in Takoma Park, Md., walk into the building on their first day of school, they will notice that extensive renovations took place over the summer. The John Jay Williams Chapel, completed in 1970, is now outfitted with state-of-the-art audiovisual equipment. Workers stripped the stage area of carpet (pictured) and returned it to a hardwood finish. They also restained the side paneling that envelops the room, improved the lighting and raised the floor so that the entire audience can have a good view of the stage.

By the end of the summer, the entire campus will have undergone asbestos removal treatment. Additionally, classrooms will be fully tiled and lighting adjustments made in areas of concern throughout the campus. Another computer lab was added, and there are improvements to the school’s computer network. These facility renovations will be ongoing to ensure that the TA campus continues to be a functional environment.—Story by David Turner

Spencerville Student Musicians Perform, Do Outreach in South Africa

Earlier this summer, two Spencerville Adventist Academy seniors, Vanessa Baioni and Sydney Portela (pictured), had the privilege of traveling and performing in South Africa with the New England Youth Ensemble (NEYE) and Columbia Collegiate Chorale of Washington Adventist University in Takoma Park, Md. Baioni is a violinist in the NEYE and Portela sings in the chorale.

One place the tour group visited of special interest to Baioni was the Maluti Adventist Hospital in the Kingdom of Lesotho. Baioni and her sister, Juliana, who is also an NEYE member, delivered baby blankets made for the hospital by participants of Keep in Stitches, a ministry of the Spencerville church. Baioni, her sister and their mother founded the ministry. “Making baby blankets to send to Maluti was one of many projects we have completed. It was a privilege for my sister and me to deliver the blankets into such deserving hands,” commented Baioni.—Story by Heidi Wetmore
30 Allegheny East Teens Make Baptism Decisions at Camp Meeting

During the Allegheny East Conference (AEC) Camp Meeting held in Pine Forge, Pa., 30 teens accepted the invitation to be baptized. While some chose to be baptized at their home churches, 11 decided to seal their commitment at the culmination of camp meeting. Pastor Gary Banks, assistant Youth Ministries director, baptized the teens at the Pine Forge Academy pool following Sabbath service.

“It is amazing to be a part of something as special as when young people decide to follow Jesus. I pray that the Lord will continue to inspire youth leaders to develop relevant ministries that change the lives of our young men and women,” said Banks.

The AEC Youth Ministries department’s theme for the year is “My Gifts for My God.” Throughout the week, various presenters incorporated that theme into their presentations on topics such as dating, sex, bullying, self-esteem and ministry.—Story by LaTasha Hewitt; photo by Richard Gordon

Former Sligo Pastor Challenges Members at Homecoming

You would be right on target for thinking that Sligo church’s Homecoming service on Friday evening, was a family sing-along with several trips down memory lane. Led by Steve Chavez, Sligo’s Board chair, those present indulged in singing old favorites. The next morning, Peter Bath (pictured), who served as the senior pastor of this Takoma Park, Md., church from 2000 to 2005 and Homecoming special guest speaker, recalled some of his memorable ministry experiences at Sligo.
He also lamented the tendency of Americans to turn away from that which challenges and encouraged congregants not to turn away from presenting Christ to the community in a practical and constructive manner. “We have not been saved to wait for the kingdom. The kingdom of God is already here,” Bath stressed.—Story by Don W. McFarlane

And 8 Other Things I Learned at the Columbia Union Camporee
Story by Taashi Rowe
Published 8/15/2012

1. Rain Comes With The Territory.
Thursday it rained, Friday it rained and Sabbath it rained, though not as much. Though I cringed at driving and walking through the mud and ran for cover during intermittent showers, most of the Pathfinders shrugged off the bad weather. Rain comes with the territory, they said while donning ponchos, umbrellas and other rain gear. According to Harriett Ponder, a member of Potomac Conference’s Seabrook Seahawks in Lanham, Md., Pathfinders learn to “stick it out in the rain, snow and cold!” And stick it out they did. Some 1,600 Pathfinders braved the weather at the Columbia Union Conference “Choose Without Compromise” Camporee held last week at Camp Mohaven in Danville, Ohio.

2. Help is just a tent away.
After a night of heavy rains and strong winds, members of the Central Spanish Conquistadores, a Pathfinder club comprised of three Chesapeake Conference churches in Maryland, awoke to find their canopy destroyed and its contents rain-soaked. “We would have been discouraged but the Waldorf Wildcats rescued us and gave us a new canopy and others chipped in to help set it up,” said Lourdes Alvarenga, a member of the Washington-Spencerville Spanish church in Ashton, Md. “Then the Hagerstown Pathfinders blessed us by sharing breakfast with us. It was wonderful how everyone came together and helped!”

3. It’s fun, you make friends and you learn a lot!
Pathfinders really enjoy camping, swimming, earning honors and making friends. During the four-day event, attendees could work on 40 honors, including sand, rope knots, African-African Adventist History and the hugely popular tie-dying.

4. Pathfinders is not just for Adventists.
John Garrett and his daughter Shannon feel quite at home even though they attend a Sunday church. When his daughters made friends at Chesapeake Conference’s Atholton church in Columbia, Md., he thought he would check out their Faith Blazers club. He discovered that his daughters “were getting a much better Christian education than they were at our church.” Most of the kids in the Ohio Conference’s Akron Crusaders Pathfinder Club in Ohio, are not members of the church. “We don’t know why they would want to keep hanging out with a bunch of 50 to 60 year olds, but we love them and they love us," shares Mark Sarokes, one of the club’s counselors.

Potomac’s Woodbridge (Va.) Ghanaian church Asempa Pathfinder Club was such a welcoming place that Georgina Yeboah joined members at the camporee. While at there, she also made a commitment to Christ. Yeboah said, “[The speaker] was talking about Jesus’ second coming. I want to see Jesus face to face and so I came forward.”

5. When you’re scared, you learn to trust God. “Some of the little kids were scared when it was thundering, but I saw it as my chance to put my faith in God. After I did that I believed everything would be fine,” said Kassandra Fernandez, 17, a member of The New Jersey Conference Passaic I church’s Soldiers of the King Pathfinder Club in Passaic, N.J.

6. It’s a family affair. Sebastian Harris, 16, and Alexander Azambuja, 17, of the Pennsylvania Conference Easton church Hummingbirds, say their counselors have impacted their lives. “They cry with us, feed us, come to our house to pick us up, play sports with us and play jokes on us,” they say. And although Azambuja is heading to college, he’ll always be a member of this club, because “you can’t leave a family.”

7. It’s about giving back. “You impact another generation,” said Corrine Rawlings, a member of Potomac Conference’s New River Valley church in Radford, Va., and an area coordinator for the conference, she says, “Someone gave their time for me and I’ve never forgotten that counselor.”
Tony Clemmon, Northeast area coordinator for the Allegheny West Conference, says he tries to teach his Pathfinders to, “stand up and take responsibility for their choices.”

8. Once a Pathfinder, always a Pathfinder. Marie Grant, a member of Allegheny West Conference’s Gienville church in Cleveland, joined the Pathfinders 62 years ago when she was 10 growing up in Trinidad. Since then her entire family has joined the church and all her children are Pathfinders, too. E.W. and Zelda Bailey, members of the Allegheny West Berea church in Middletown, Ohio, are now in their 80s. They retired just this year after serving some 48 years as Pathfinders leaders.

9. You get closer to God. On Sabbath when speaker José H. Cortés, Jr., Youth Ministries director for the Atlantic Union Conference, called for Pathfinders to “Choose Without Compromise,” dozens came forward for baptism. Among them was Denny Grady’s 13-year-old daughter, Noe, a member of the Waynesboro (Va.) Mountaineers. As the Potomac Conference’s Youth Ministries director said the closing prayer, he teared up. “It’s always the dream and the hope of every pastor that your child makes the same type of decision for Jesus that you do,” he later shared.
Jonathan Dale, director of the Mountain View Conference’s Summersville church Warriors said the sermons made an impression on his three sons. “Micah, my six-year-old grabbed my hand and said, ‘Daddy, I want to be baptized.’ I looked around and suddenly Nathan and Zachary were also standing by my side. I don’t know if they know what it means, but this was the first time in their lives, they’ve come forward like this.”

Members from the union’s Office of Education, register attendees.

Division, some 500 are from the Columbia Union. We pray and prepare to greet and register them (there’s already one waiting patiently). With that many people trying to get registered and checked into their rooms, I expect that our team of six will encounter our fair share of challenges.

It’s mid-afternoon and my job has changed from greeting and directing our educators to running back and forth from one end of the convention center to the other trying to ensure that they have the appropriate lodging. At 6:30 p.m. we close the window and move into the main auditorium for the opening session, one of nine such general sessions that will be presented over the next four days. Afterward, we notice that a line has formed in front of our booth, so we ditch the plans to wait until Monday morning to re-open and are rewarded with grateful smiles from tired educators who just want to get to their beds after a long but fulfilling day. One attendee shares with me that she was blessed after hearing Carlton Byrd, DMin, speaker and director for Breath of Life Ministries, and could not wait to see and hear what was in store for the remainder of the convention.

Monday: Communications 101 With a Minor in Patience
Today my apprehension from Sunday has been replaced with joy and exuberance. The sessions are going well, my colleagues are telling me that so far the convention has been “wonderful,” “awesome,” “professionally and spiritually refreshing.” At about 1:20 p.m., I sit with Jeff Bovee (pictured) for our class on “Servant Leadership and the Principalship.” Last year he was my principal at Spring Valley Academy in Centerville, Ohio, and I was his vice principal. This year we are both serving in different capacities: he is now education superintendent for the Pennsylvania Conference, and I serve as an education associate for the Columbia Union.
We do a final walkthrough of our presentation. Then, at about 3:35 p.m., 10 minutes before the session, we stand outside the room and wonder aloud if our only attendees would be Jeff's three family members who were seated in the back. After all we were two of about 18 presenters from the Columbia Union and teachers can choose from 530 breakout sessions. Minutes later our fears were allayed as about 27 current and prospective school leaders joined us for our session. We were scheduled to end at 5 p.m. but at 5:09, as we wrapped up, no one left and some are still taking notes.

Tuesday: A Lesson on The Three Ms and Four Rs
It's about 7:45 a.m., and I am strolling leisurely toward the main auditorium. I am in a reflective mood as I look forward to the morning worship. Dwight Nelson, pastor of the Pioneer Memorial church at Andrews University (Mich.) has been inspiring and challenging us daily. He is reminding us that teachers Motivate, Mentor and Mobilize and that we should be teaching the fours Rs: Reading, Writing, Arithmetic and Redemption! Afterward, I am inspired, motivated and ready for my students to come through the door. I’m ready for the first day of school! Then it dawns on me that I serve in a different capacity now. While I won’t be in a classroom this year, I know that the three Ms and four Rs still apply to my new administrative ministry.
Wednesday: Technology 3.0 and a Major in Purpose

After the final devotional, I see something that has become familiar during this conference—educators using QR Code readers to scan the badges of fellow attendees to secure their contact information. There were even QR Codes on all accessible convention signs, which when scanned lead to the convention website and the most up-to-date information such as breakout session cancellations and room changes. As I inquire, I learn that this convention has been cutting edge with its use of technology.

Cheryl Jacko, assistant superintendent for the Mountain View Conference, and Yvette Cooper, superintendent for the Allegheny West Conference, sing together.

When I asked teachers their thoughts on the devotion and the convention, Garry Emmons, a young educator from New Jersey, said the conference was “just great” and that he enjoyed the experience. Another educator gushed, “I am on information overload, but this is just great!”

We have been through one opening session, three devotions, four general sessions, over 500 break out sessions, two morning prayer meetings, one anointing service and one commitment service. I have been blessed, inspired, informed and motivated to continue on the “Journey to Excellence” in Seventh-day Adventist education as we move hearts and minds upward.

Sandra Juarez and Manny Cruz will host the 2012 Latino Youth NET to air this fall.

NAD’s “Changed” Initiative to Target Young Latinos
Story by Laura Sámano
Published 8/15/12

Through an evangelistic initiative called “Changed: Real Lives in a Real World,” the North American Division (NAD) will target more than 30 million second- and third-generation Hispanic youth with the three angels’ messages. Through the yearlong initiative, which launches this fall, NAD leaders hope to challenge the youth to accept Jesus as their Lord and Savior.

Traditionally, Latino evangelism has focused on foreign-born Hispanics, but NAD statistics indicate that Adventism is growing slowly among second- and third-generation Hispanics. Because of these generations’ blended linguistic and cultural characteristics, “Changed” is designed to speak their language and present Jesus as One who identifies with their needs.

As part of the yearlong initiative, the 2012 Latino Youth NET includes several weekend training events and a live satellite broadcast in Spanish, October 13–20, from Orlando via Esperanza TV and in English, November 3–10, via the Hope Channel. Find out more at facebook.com/changedlatinoyouth, vimeo.com/changedlatinoyouth and youtube.com/changedlatinoyouth. Resources are available through adventsource.org.

Members Develop Ministerial Skills at Ohio Conference’s ACS Symposium

Story by Monte Sahlin
Published 8/9/2012

More than 50 men and women from across Ohio and neighboring states spent a weekend at Ohio Conference’s Worthington church developing their skills for ministry, hoping to learn how to better meet needs in their local communities. Each participant could select to attend one of the following three seminars: “Tutoring Underprivileged Children,” taught by Sandra Brown, specialist for the North American Division (NAD) Adventist Community Services; “Community Development” led by Gaspar Colon, PhD, dean of the School of Arts and Social Sciences at Washington Adventist University in Takoma Park, Md.; and “Disaster Response Projects,” taught by Joe Watts, NAD Disaster Response coordinator.

A group of young adults from the Ebenezer Haitian church in Columbus took the tutoring seminar. As a result, they are now planning to organize a tutoring/mentoring program for children in their neighborhood, most of whom live under the poverty line and have single parents. Andrew Clark, who recently relocated to Ohio to lead the four-church Youngstown district, and some of his members also attended. Clark shared his hopes and dreams for making a real impact in Youngstown, a metropolitan area with the highest level of human need.

At least 10 other Ohio Conference churches sent one or more members to the training event. Several have already started community projects, while others are thinking of doing so in the future.

SLIGO HOMECOMING 2012 – REVIEW

You would be right on target for thinking that Sligo’s Homecoming service on Friday evening was a family sing-along, with several trips down memory lane. Led by Sligo’s Board chair, Steve Chavez, those present indulged in singing old favorites such as ‘The Captain Calls for You’ and ‘Brighten the Corner Where You Are.’ Some articulated why they considered Sligo their spiritual home and the kind of church they wanted Sligo to be in the future. This warm and intimate service showed much of what Sligo is all about - mission, friendship, acceptance and service.

Teachers for the adult Sabbath School classes got a day off as Roy Adams, former Associate Editor of the Advent Review, led an engaging discussion on the week’s lesson, The Apostolic Example. The Apostles’ confidence in sharing the gospel, their desire to please God at all times and their caring and compassionate disposition were presented as qualities that should characterize the lives of modern day disciples.

Sligo’s senior pastor from 2000 to 2005 and Homecoming special guest speaker, Peter Bath, seemed at home in both the 8:45 and 11:15 worship services, in recalling some of his memorable ministry experiences at Sligo and in urging worshippers not to turn away from that which challenges spiritually, ethically, or personally. He lamented the fact that the tendency of Americans to turn away from that which challenges is harming the country in numerous ways and encouraged his hearers not to turn away from presenting Christ to the community in a practical and constructive manner. “We have not been saved to wait for the kingdom. The kingdom of God is already here,” Bath stressed. He cited first elder, Erwin Mack’s work in ensuring that street crossing in some areas of Langley Park and Takoma Park is less dangerous than was the case previously as real kingdom work. Bath challenged worshippers individually and corporately to find practical ways to make a positive difference in the community. The baptism of Lawrence Stoll, who first attended Sligo during the Resurrection Weekend earlier this year, highlighted the external focus of the church’s mission.
Senior pastor, Charles Tapp, in his tithe and offering appeal, reminded worshippers pictorially of what the sanctuary was like before the recent renovations and paid tribute to Peter Bath for his vision and work in leading the renovation efforts. In an impassioned plea, Tapp asked each member to commit to paying off the $643,000 balance on the renovation loan by the end of the year, that the church, being free of that obligation, would be able to provide financial resources for its priorities.

Homecoming would not be complete without an International Luncheon. Takoma Academy gym was transformed into a mammoth dining hall where close to 800 people were able to choose from scores of dishes from around the world. “The food is good,” said Shane Kelly, as he surveyed the gastronomic bounty and inhaled the pleasant smells, “but I am really here for the fellowship.” No doubt, many would identify with his sentiments, as was evident from the effusive backslapping, warm embraces and hearty handshakes.

Did Pastor Bath know about the plans for outreach and evangelism before they were unfolded on Sabbath afternoon by Paolo Esposito, Sligo’s pastor for media and outreach? Many elements in the plan mirrored some of the suggestions for outreach made by Pastor Bath earlier in the day. The plans, which the pastoral staff worked together and dubbed, “Hope for Washington,” envisages a cycle of evangelism, starting in September 2012, that involves mass distribution of literature, humanitarian work in the community, home Bible studies and a reaping campaign.

David Griffiths and the Worship Experience

It was left to David Griffiths and his community choir to bring down the curtain on Homecoming 2012. “I felt as if I was worshiping,” was a comment that would have gladdened David’s heart, as he himself described the concert on Sabbath evening as a praise and worship experience. Attendees were treated to thunderous renditions of Deep River and O Happy Day, along with a number of contemporary pieces.

Sligo will not turn away from whatever it takes to ensure that it is at the heart of kingdom living, where lives are impacted positively for time and for eternity. That’s the future!

I was there on Sabbath to hear Pastor Bath. I was particularly keen to hear about the obesity problem and the powerpoint that he showed. Is it possible to get the powerpoint or can you direct me to where it can be found.

Hi Janice, you can watch the full service (including the slides) on Sligo WebTV. If you want the Slides themselves you will have to ask Pastor Bath himself as they belong to him.

Blessings!
