Southern Adventist University Begins Vegetarian Culinary Arts Program
Southern Adventist University is currently enrolling students for its new Vegetarian Culinary Arts program, set to begin in fall 2013. The program begins as a one-year certificate track, but the university plans to include associate's and bachelor's degree options by 2014.

Southern is the only Adventist school in North America offering culinary arts, and one of only a few colleges or universities in all the country providing training focused on the preparation of vegetarian and vegan foods. The bulk of the curriculum will consist of instruction in professional cooking. Some of the other courses being taught include Food Safety and Sanitation; Introduction to Food Purchasing, Preparation, and Presentation; International Ethnic Cuisines; and Introduction to Marketing for Culinary Professionals.

A new, full-time faculty member has been hired as the director and lead professor. There will also be several adjunct professors teaching classes, as well as guest speakers for class demonstrations.

To view a complete list of courses and requirements, visit southern.edu/vegetarian.
