Theological libraries are an integral part of preparation for ministry. Yet, how they work is very different in each seminary or school of theology. The differences—and surprises—increase in places outside of the United States. There is never enough money, but each of these libraries contributes to the education of young people for Christian service. We need to look for the opportunities they provide, as well as the challenges we so readily see.